Pennsylvania DHIA Makes Adjustments For Competitive World

EVERETT NEWSWANGER
Managing Editor

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.)—The sixth annual meeting of the Pennsylvania DHIA took place last Friday and Saturday with a note of optimism. The basis of this optimism came from the general feeling that Dave Slusser, the new general manager, was the right person to pull members together. In fact, Dave set the tone for the meeting in his address Saturday morning when he took the role of a servant for himself and the organization.

"I am humbly honored to be your servant," Dave said. "Our mission is to be positive about our organization. Not everyone is perfect, but when we understand our imperfections, we can better accept the imperfections of others."

On the plus side for Pennsylvania DHIA, Dave listed the good employees who are hard-working and the perfect scores the association has received for technician training, data processing and laboratory services.

"No one is any better in these scores than we are," Dave said. "Yet we have lots of business competition that does not have these perfect scores. We need to get this message out. We do have good services to provide to our members."

To cut expenses, Dave said the association plans to give up the offices on College Avenue and move the total operation back into the lab building on the Penn State campus. In addition, there will be some employee reduction to lower costs, but the goal is to not lower quality of service.

"I would like to turn Pennsylvania DHIA upside down," Dave said. "The most important people

High Tunnel Systems May Provide Earlier, Greater Yields

ANDY ANDREWS

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — Vegetable growers can benefit in a big way from using high tunnel systems — perhaps real big.

Tomatoes can be picked about a month early and can yield twice as much as field tomatoes if growers utilize the technology of high tunnel production.

Dr. Otho Wells, extension vegetable specialist with the University of New Hampshire, spoke about the results of trials using high tunnel production on Monday at the New Holland Vegetable Day. About 150 area farmers and agribusiness representatives attended.

Wells said that, in results obtained from a simple, 14 foot by 96 foot high tunnel, a grower experienced a one-month increase in market opportunity for his

Delmarva Broiler/Fryer Market

Wednesday, February 23, 1994

Movement of ready-to-cook whole birds was light to moderate. Seller offerings were adequate to fully adequate and in the closer balance on under 3 pound sizes. Live supplies remained moderate, instances light. Weights were in a full range, and were heavier than desired at several plants. Processing schedules were reduced slightly, but still remained very heavy. Less than trucklot asking prices were unchanged at 52 to 64 cents. Trade sentiment was no better than steady. In the parts complex, breast items varied from closely cleared to long. Wings were in fairly good balance. Leg items were slow to clear some plants.

The OLD FARMER'S ALMANAC THIS WEEK WITH

FEB. 28-MARCH 6, 1994

NATIONAL PIG DAY, MARCH 1.

INAUGURATION DAY

George Washington's first term of office began on March 4, 1789 however, he was not sworn into office until April 30, and did not even know of his election until April 14. March 4 was the original date set for the new government to convene Unfortunately, Congress didn't have a quorum to count the electoral votes until April 6 Luckily, the late start to the first presidency did not adversely affect Washington's ability to lead the young nation Washington's second inaugural took place "on time" in 1793, and March 4 remained the official beginning of each new presidential term until 1933 (except in the case of successions due to death of incumbent). In 1933, the Twentieth Amendment (known as the "lame-duck" amendment) was ratified, specifying that presidential terms begin at noon on January 20

From small beginnings come great things.

The OLD FARMER'S WEATHER FORECAST

SOUTHEAST: Clear and cold, then sunny and warm, showers and rain, then clearing; sunny and hot Florida

MIDWEST: Rainy, mild, then cool and clear; cold, snowstorm north and east

NORTHWEST: Cool, showers; snow mountains; clear and cold coast, then heavy snow mountains and east, rain and snow coast

TIP OF THE WEEK

EARTHWISE

Once upon a time, bottles were refilled rather than recycled In some places, they still are According to the World Watch Institute, in the province of Ontario (Canada), over 90% of the bottles sold are refillable, and more than 99% of these are actually returned for refilling That's the highest redemption rate of its kind in the world! There's really no good reason why we can't do that in this country, too We'll have to change our priorities — and let our beverage industries know what's important to us

Alfalfa Question:
Do you have to sacrifice yield and quality to get winterhardiness?

The Answer:
No.

CimarronVR and Belmont varieties stand-up to cold weather and harsh winter conditions — without sacrificing yield or quality!

These varieties can be harvested earlier in the spring and later in the fall to give higher yields, and a more even distribution of yield over the season. And because they are vigorous, they can be cut more frequently to give softer, leafier hay.

Why settle for late-starting, slow-growing, short-season alfalfa. Choose CimarronVR or Belmont – premium alfalfa varieties that not only provide excellent winterhardiness, yield and quality – but also combined resistance to all the major diseases, insects, and nematodes that attack alfalfa. Proven performance.

OPINION

Farmers Call Editor

After reading our page one story last week about the farm animals that were incapacitated by the ice and snow in barnyards and meadows, several horse farmers called to make suggestions about what to do in those conditions. One farmer spreads manure on the barnyard and lets it freeze into the ice to make a rough surface. Another has a dirt barn floor, and this farmer scrapes dirt from the floor and spreads this dirt on the icy paddock to create better footing for the animals.

In addition to better footing for your animals, Larry Hutchinson, in the veterinary science extension department at Penn State says that while most farm animals can tolerate cold weather better than humans, in extreme cold weather you should take a few extra measures to insure the well-being of your livestock.

Hay bales and feed bunks are sometimes hard to reach in deep or drifting snow, and you may need to feed in a sheltered area or use a tractor to pack the snow around the feeding areas. Heated watering devices or frequent ice-breaking on streams or ponds may also be necessary.

All classes of livestock require more energy to maintain body temperature in cold weather. Livestock, such as beef cows or horses that are kept outdoors, may need additional forage and grain.

Another farmer who read our editorial in the February 5 issue about the problems farmers are having with tests for medicines in the milk at the plant called this week to say he was having the same kind of problem with SCC tests. Samples from the same tank gave official results that varied as much as 600,000 cells. While this farmer recently went through a barn fire that put stress on the cows, all individual cows were tested and no individual showed cell counts above acceptable levels.

Officials say individual SCC tests can be variable from the same sample. This leaves dairymen vulnerable to SCC scores that are unacpetable, especially at the break point of 750,000 cells.

To Check Alfalfa Seeding Rates

Dr. Marvin Hall at Penn State just completed a study of seeding rates for alfalfa in conventionally prepared seedbeds.

In this study, alfalfa was seeded at seven different rates (6-24 pounds per acre) at five different locations. Plant density and forage yield and quality were monitored through the first harvest of the year after seeding.

Plant densities were lower for the lowest compared to the highest seeding rate throughout the study. The lowest seeding rate (six pounds per acre) reduced yield 322 pounds per acre compared to the highest seeding rate for the first harvest after planting.

There were no yield differences at other harvests. Forage quality at all harvests were not affected by seeding rate. The conclusion of this study was: "In Pennsylvania, when spring, band seeding alfalfa into well prepared seedbed, seeding rates above 9 pounds pure live seed per acre are not justified. Seeding methods other than band seeding or planting under adverse climatic conditions or into poorly prepared seedbed may warrant higher seeding rates other than 9 pounds per acre. However, increasing seeding rates has not been demonstrated as a successful practice to overcome adverse conditions for alfalfa establishment."

To Be Concerned About Environmental Issues

Improving and protecting the environment is a major public issue. We are seeing more legislative activity in this area.

Agriculture and farmers have been identified as a major concern along with on-lot sewage disposal, automobile emissions, and industrial production.

Farmers need to develop a positive strategy to deal with this and other emerging issues. First, farmers need to realize and accept responsibility for environmental protection. Next, farmers need to cite how agriculture is improving the environment more than creating new problems.

We need time and research to solve problems and set standards. Agriculture needs to act more quickly to identify and anticipate environmental issues and develop solutions.

Farmers need to demand science in the form of research and technology is engaged as part of the solution. Agriculture needs to be more aggressive in their public relations efforts to help the public understand agriculture's role role in sustaining the environment.

The environmental issue is not going away. By accepting it and becoming a part of the solution will ensure the future of agriculture.

To Reduce Pathogens

Pathogen reduction on farms has become a high priority within the United States Department of Agriculture.

Most of the major farm commodity groups have instituted quality assurance programs. These include the dairy, egg, and pork industries.

The safety of food is the responsibility of everyone in the food production system — including the farmer. Testing is only a monitoring tool and cannot guarantee safety. Only best management practices being used by everyone will maintain the integrity of our food system.

As farmers, we expect the businesses we are dealing with are providing us with the best product possible. We expect no defects and top performances. We would be very upset to find out they sold us inferior materials or broken parts.

Consumers expect the same from farmers and the food they buy. Thus, every farmer needs to be concerned with producing the highest quality product possible and never sell anything you would not buy or eat.

Learn about your industry quality assurance program and become a participant.

United We Stand, Divided We Fall! Very smart and very simply put.

These are the words that finally got this great nation together. You know the United States of America. Do you think it took courage and strength to join 13 colonies? To form one United States?

If it worked, then why can't it work now?

For example, I've heard it said, "You can't get one farmer to agree with another about anything." Well, when times were good, you had farmers very satisfied with milk prices. But you also had farmers complaining and maybe a bit jealous of a bigger, more stable family farm.

As time went on, the processors saw this bickering and jealousy

THE BIBLE SPEAKS
BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

THE WAYSIDE INN
February 27, 1994

Background Scripture:
Luke 23:32-47; 24:13-35
Devotional Reading:
Mark 15:33-37

I have caught myself saying "If I die..., "when, of course, I should have said, "When I die..." Whether that is just a habit of speech or an unconscious slip that betrays an inner and faint hope that I might personally escape what is the destiny of every living creature, I am not sure.

Maybe it is that, having lived with fears and crises throughout my life and been spared many "close ones," I now unconsciously hope that I shall get through this one, too. Rationally, I know better. No amount of cleverness, will, luck or even good contact can intervene because it is part of God's plan.

Recently I found these words of St. Augustine: "There is only one thing you can be sure of: that you will die; everything else in this life, good or bad, is uncertain except death." At first, I was uncomfortable with these words, but I soon realized my discomfort is only the result of a limited perspective.

A MATTER OF HOW

So, it is not a question of whether we will die, but how. Look at the way Jesus died! Betrayed by one of his disciples, railroaded on a trumped-up charge, tortured and denied virtually any shred of human dignity, he nevertheless died in a way that put to shame the living of all others. "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (23:34). With those ten words he made himself victor instead of victim. People did their worst, but their worst was not strong enough to overcome his best. In the midst of his agony and degradation, he was magnanimous; to a repentant thief he promised, "Truly, I say to you, today you will be with me in paradise" (23:43). And, at that final moment he took himself out of the hands of those who nailed him to the cross: "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit!" In the street vernacular, "Man! That's living!"

The death of Jesus stands in stark contrast to the living that many of us do. During World War II, Robert D. Abrahams wrote:

For some men die by shrapnel, and some go down in flames, But most men perish inch by inch.

In play at little games.

Dying "inch by inch" allows us to continue under the delusion that we are living, that we are escaping death. Like the epitaph I copied years ago: "Died at 45; buried at 62." We all know someone like that, don't we? As someone has said: "Some die without having really lived, while others continue to live, in spite of the fact that they have died."

THE WAYSIDE INN

Basically, we can die more victoriously if we accept that death is part of God's plan for life. Life on earth is not intended to last forever. Life, as we know it now, and death, as we perceive it, are only stopping places along the way to our ultimate destiny. Recently, my wife and I were forced to quickly find another house to move into for at least three months because of substantial water damage to the underside of our house. In the hurried preparation to move out of the house where I expected to spend the rest of my life, it dawned on me that that house is only a stopping place on my journey — even when we move back into it.

Cicero said, "I depart from life as from an inn, and not as from my home." And St. Augustine wrote: "...the man journeying to his own country must not mistake the inn for his home." That's the mistake we make — mistaking the inn of earthly life for our home country. When we see it as only a stopping place along the way, we can say with Jesus; "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit!"

among farmers as a way to set the prices paid to farmers. Notice that I wrote "Farmers" — this relates not just to milk or eggs, but to all farmers.

At this time, a small number of handlers and processors began to make a profit on our hard work. They got together and set a price on our products to set their bank accounts.

You probably are thinking, "No, we as farmers set our price for our own product." Now who do you think the processor is going to listen to? All the farmers that are bickering and fighting and jealous of their neighbors? No way! The are probably laughing all the way to the bank.

Years ago, there was a farm in every corner of every township. It was hard to get them all together, let alone together enough to have them all agree on one fair price paid to them in their home area. Because of this divided and separated lifestyle we as farmers were weak and vulnerable.

Do you think that today, with the way we get paid for our products, is any different? Not yet!

Because we are not all united. The balance of the producers and processors is getting closer — with fewer and fewer farmers producing the same amount of food as before — shows me we are getting stronger to set a price that is suitable to us.

Please, next time you walk by a mirror, stop and take a look. Ask yourself some questions. Take a long look beyond your reflection.

Is there a future? Who's Kidding Whom?

Sincerely,
Peter A. Seman

Agri-Finance Seminar Addresses Dimensions That Affect Agriculture

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Participants at the CoreStates Hamilton Bank Agri-Education Seminar on Thursday examined ideas for wrestling with profit and lifestyle in the ever-changing world of agriculture.

The seminar focused on the different dimensions of agriculture.

The Washington dimension was addressed by John Blanchfield, associate director for the American Bankers Association Agricultural Bankers Division, who told about changes in government farm policy that will affect agriculture soon. There will be a reorganization of USDA with a consolidation of Farm and Home Administration and the ASCS.

There is a proposal to enable every farmer to purchase crop insurance for $50. This is to counteract the present tendancy for some farmers not to purchase crop insurance because federal disaster programs kick in when areas suffer natural disasters. If the crop insurance proposal passes, Congress will no longer approve disaster assistance.

Blanchfield said that while farmers do not like that the majority of USDA budget has little to do with actual agriculture and everything to do with housing, WIC, and welfare programs, this enables farmers to have enough mass to be a major player in the government budget.

There are too few politicians with agricultural ties to enable them to understand the unique circumstances of the farmer, he said.

During breaks, the seminar offers an opportunity for speakers and agriculture industry representatives to exchange ideas and ask questions. From left are John Henkel, Lou Moore, and John Hess.

Most of the agriculture policy matters are being handled by people without ag background who are legislating billions of dollars.

While farmers are inclined to become disgusted with government's agricultural decisions, Blanchfield warned that the last thing the farming community needs is to be on the other side of the fence of the consumer.

"You need to avoid that going alone attitude because your product must go to consumers," he said.

Although farming exports are down now, Blanchfield predicts that the first decade of the next century will be the golden age of exports for farmers. Much of the exports will be what is called value-added enterprise. An example of this is exporting cornflakes but not more corn.

Blanchfield said that although farmers often complain of government interference in farm policies, there are the positive aspects with cost-sharing projects, land-grant colleges, and extension services.

David Kohl, professor of agricultural finance at Virginia Tech, spoke about the changing financial and management dimensions. Farmers to be successul in the 21st century will need to become more interdependent on each other and with environmental consultants and biotechnology.

While interest rates have been low, they are rising and farmers should keep in mind that even a one percent increase in interest rates results in 12 to 16 percent decline of income.

"Only 40 to 45 percent of American farms have the potential for a positive bottom-line and this will decline to one-third at the turn of the century," Kohl said.

He predicted that 60 percent will operate the farm for a life-style rather than a profit, which means frequently more than one person will be working off the farm. Eighty percent will need off the farm income to continue.

While farmers often attempt to work harder to increase profits, Kohl said that low profits from overwork will result in loss of farm or family.

Kohl said that he has seen some fantastic profit and balance sheets by very unhappy individuals.

"Relationship is everything. Family business wants trust and if you violate that you negate relationships."

On the positive side, a recent survey showed that 78 percent of ag-college students want to return to the family farm compared to only 12 percent in the '80s.

Environmental, energy, and water issues will increase farmers' expenses, but one consolation, Kohl said, is that the homeowner is going to be hit for violating enviromental laws.

William Perry, director of member relations and government affairs for Milk Marketing, Inc., lightheartedly remarked on farmers' annoyance with government's interference in agriculture by saying, "The government ain't ever going to get out of your life because you and me are the government."

To give the audience perspective on the elements that impact the complexity of the farm bill, Perry said that the Constitution was written on four pages, this year's budget took 1,985 pages, and the last farm bill was compiled of 4,000 pages.

In a firey orator style, Perry spouted off facts and figures that explains why and how government decisions are made and the frustration of trying to educate Congressmen on agricultural issues. He said, 63 percent of Congressmen have been in Washington two years or less. Consequently those working on the new farm bill that will be drawn up have no idea "on what we are talking about."

Because Congress reflects us (society), he said, of the 121 new House members, 40 are black; 19, Hispanic; and 54 are women. Twenty-five percent of the elected body come from three states: California, Texas, and Florida and these 25 percent influence the decisions that face the nation. "What are people's hot button? In California, its environmental issues, Florida, retirement concerns, and in Texas, cowboy issues, he said.

"Because the world is changing, we are becoming a nation of haves and have nots. You are the haves because you are the element of society that has resources, industry, and wealth," Perry told the farmers.

Poverty-driving attitudes will change the way the world does business. Perry said that when milk price increases are discussed and Congress finds out it will increase the price of milk for WIC, Congress dictates that it can't be done because it would prevent low-income persons from being able to afford milk.

You may complain about the increase in the price of a car, Perry said, but that is a one-time purchase and you soon stop complaining. Food purchases are constant and a daily reminder to take care of the have nots.

"Learn to work in the new world. Always keep perspective in mind when reacting to the world," Perry said.

The biotechnological dimension was addressed by G. Terry Sharrer, curator of Agiculture at Smithsonian Institute. He told of tremendous breakthroughs in technology that hold the potential to reinvent agriculture altogether. "Your sons and daughters will probably raise animals and plants that don't exist now," he said.

Current research on a chicken that is resistent to respiratory infections will result in growing a 5 pound broiler within 21 days.

While gene therapy is controversial, it results in saving lives and has the potential to wipe out cancer in future generations. Transgenetic sheep and pigs that produce antibodies in milk from an inserted gene to treat human illnesses is possible to make human, animal, and plant life healthier.

Currently scientists are trying to make a healthier mosquito. While that sounds ridiculous in actuality it would make a mosquito so healthy that it could not contract malaria and transmit it to humans.

"When people see how biotechnolgy can treat humans, the controversary in using it agriculture will reside," he said.

Larry Webber, president of a managment consultant firm, focused on the human dimension of agriculture. He concentrated on seven habits of effective people. To put first things first, Webber encouraged the audience to write down the things they want to be remembered for in their personal and work life at their funerals Each should also decide the one thing they could do superbly in their personal and work life that would produce wonderful results. This shows where individuals place values. Then compare where time and effort is spent compared to what is important. This simple exercise can change your habits, he said.

H. Louis Moore, professor of ag economics at Penn State, addressed the economic dimension, which has been reported in several issues of Lancaster Farming recently .

Brown Swiss Sale

FREDERICK, Md. — This year's Mid-Atlantic Brown Swiss Calf Sale will be held at 10:30 a.m. on Saturday, April 30, at the Frederick Fairgrounds, Frederick, Maryland.

This annual sale has gained quite a track record for calves sold. Many have developed into National Show quality animals, State and National Bell Ringers, All-Americans, and profitable additions to many herds.

Now is your chance to consign a calf to this sale — check those calf pens and pedigrees and see what you can offer. This sale has been a great place to buy a 4-H project and has also provided some top-pedigreed calves for the merchandising and investment buyer. We are looking for a strong group of calves that combine a unique blend of production and sound type.

If you are interested in consigning a calf, or wish additional information about the sale, please contact: Howard Fleming (301) 475-3440; Harold Long (301) 271-7577; or Cindy Warner (301) 371-5206.

The sale committee would like to have the pedigrees by Friday, March 25, to get the catalog completed in plenty of time for interested buyers to review. Also pedigree information is requested as early as possible in order to promote and advertise your consignment properly.

Dry Cow Management Key To Healthy High Production

VERNON ACHENBACH JR.
Lancaster Farming Staff

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Two dairy experts traded off in a fast-paced, fact- and opinion-packed Lancaster County Dairy Day seminar held Tuesday at the Lancaster Farm and Home Center.

Like a tag-team duo, the two doctors alternated with a series of short slide presentations, that reinforced what each other observed, while giving their own reasons.

The experts were Brian Perkins, PhD, a dairy expert with DairyTech Management Service Inc., of New Haven, Vt.; and Dr. Robert Fry, a veterinarian with Atlantic Dairy Management Service, of Chestertown, Md.

The same two speakers had been scheduled to speak at Prescott Fire Hall in Lebanon County on Wednesday for that county's dairy day program, but it was cancelled because of a winter storm.

According to Ken Winebark, Lebanon County extension agent, Lebanon County people who were interested in attending the program can still pick up information papers that were to be distributed.

Also, the Lancaster program was video taped and according to Glenn Shirk, Lancaster County dairy extension agent, copies are available for a nominal charge to cover the cost of reproduction. For more information, call (717) 394-6851.

Lancaster County has also scheduled a second all-day Dairy Day seminar for Tuesday, March 1, also at the Lancaster Farm and Home Center, located on Farm and Home Center Road, off of Rt. 72, near Rt. 30.

The theme of this Tuesday's program was management for high producing cows through all stages of life and lactation, with an emphasis on nutrition, reproduction and herd profits.

Glenn Shirk started off the program reviewing the basics of dairy farm management and outlined goals for success, and problems and practices to avoid.

Perkins and Fry then proceeded to discuss several topics, taking questions from the audience of about 150, throughout the day.

Because of audience interest, the two even continued a question and answer session for a half hour as the morning session finished, cutting into the lunch break.

Fry started off explaining that, in order for any type of management program for high producing cattle to become effective, teamwork is required.

He said a three-way team relationship should exist between the dairyman, his veterinarian and his nutritionist.

"The very best nutritionist or vet can't do it without the dairyman," Fry said. "All have to work very closely together."

According to Fry, the person with the biggest responsibility in the relationship is the dairyman, charged with at least 50 percent of the responsibility for a successful program.

This is so, because the dairyman has to understand and carry out the advice of the nutritionist and vet. He has to be the one who recognizes the subtleties of the herd and make the nutritionist and vet aware of them.

And the dairyman is the one who has to make sure records are kept and that the information being recorded is accurate and dependable.

Fry then outlined the topics he would cover; replacement heifers, dry cows, calving, peak milk production, and late lactation.

He said the goal for replacement heifers is to, "Get from calf to milking as fast, as healthy, and as efficiently as possible."

According to Fry, the goal should be to go from calving to milking at 24 months with an average daily gain of 1.7 pounds. That way body weight at pre-freshening should be around 1,350 pounds, counting the calf.

The loss of income to the dairyman for maintaining a heifer to 26 months before freshening "is tremendous," Fry said.

According to the veterinarian, it can cost from $1 to $1.20 per day during those two extra months, with no offsetting production to pay for itself.

For 50 heifers, that amounts to an extra $3,000 being paid out because the first calving is at 26 months, instead of 24 months.

The loss of milk income during those two months makes the loss even more significant.

Furthermore, over the duration of a dairyman's herd's life, he is losing years of opportunity to be increasing the genetic value of the herd.

He said the key to freshening heifers at 24 months is to start with healthy newborn heifers and that means maternity stalls in a clean, dry, isolated (from other animals and people) area so that the dam cow doesn't have any problem with internal natural hormonal mechanisms which promote a healthy calving.

The newborn calf should have fresh, full-strength colostrum within the first eight hours and preferably within the first couple of hours.

"The very best nutritionist or vet can't do it without the dairyman," Fry said. "All have to work very closely together."

A rule of thumb both experts offered is a gallon of colostrum in the first eight hours, but better if that gallon can be given within the first hour or two, even if it means stomach tube feeding.

The reason for this is because once the initial wave of colostrum passes through the intestines, the walls of the intestine become less absorbing of the protection of the colostrum. After eight hours, any potential for the colostrum to give the calf protection is negligible.

Keep the calf, clean, dry and fed well, but not fat, they said.

"This care is more important that all the vitamins, etc., that you can give a calf," Fry said.

He also said to use a 7-percent iodine solution (not teat dip which is usually around 1 percent) on the naval and to keep the newborn clean and dry.

"It doesn't have to be fancy," Fry said.

As far as feeding the calf, use whole milk or whole milk replacer with at least 20 percent protein and 20 percent fat.

"Check the label," Fry said. "If you have 24 percent replacer and dilute it according to the label, you're going to have 2.4 percent fat, 2.4 percent protein."

He said that many people use milk replacer as recommended on the labels, because it appears to be more inexpensive than whole milk.

However, Fry said to consider the real value. He said that while feeding whole milk might seem expensive, it is much cheaper than feeding milk replacer diluted only to the point that it equals the food value of milk.

To get fast gains on heifers, both experts recommended feeding higher quantities of protein than what the NRC recommends.

Regular whole milk runs about 3.67 percent or higher in butterfat, and at about 3.2 percent protein. Compared to the amounts of those components in replacer, the dairyman is actually paying more when he uses replacer as it should be mixed.

Fry said that a heifer should be vaccinated twice — once during pre-breeding at age 8 months to a year; and again after being confirmed pregnant.

Deworming can be done through incorporating it into the heifer feed. It should be done twice in the spring, not in the fall or winter.

It should be done early to knock out the first wave of roundworms, etc., and then repeated later to reduce the second wave and kill the adults and any new infections.

If a herd manager puts the heifers out and then waits until the fall to worm them, the heifers will have already suffered the whole summer and not grown to potential.

Many parasites go into dormancy during the late fall through winter and treatment is ineffective.

First breeding of the young heifer should be done based on the animal's age, height and body weight.

The time to breed is a combination of the (Holstein) heifer being 52 inches tall at the shoulder, have a body score of 3.5 and be 14 months old. "There is nothing in here about weight, because it is difficult to weigh animals correctly and many farms don't have scales."

As far as facilities for heifers, they don't have to be fancy, but they should be designed so that the heifers can be easily handled, both men said. Headlocking feeding gates work well.

Identification should be easy, Fry said, and he recommended large ear tags in both ears, which more or less follows recommendations by the National Holstein Association, as well.

Perkins said that the average age to first freshening has not changed much over the past 30 years. According to the expert, in 1962, the average age was 27.5 months. In 1986, it was 27.8 months. "There's been no progress, what's wrong?" Perkins asked rhetorically.

Being from Vermont, Perkins said the cattle there average a little smaller in stature than those in the Lancaster and Maryland. However, his recommendations for breeding were close to those made by Fry.

He said at breeding at 13 months they should be about 750 to 800 pounds and be about 50 inches high. They should be experiencing about a 1.8- to 2-pound-per day rate of gain at that time.

Perkins said they should be 55 inches at the withers, 1,250 pounds at freshening (which he later said was the weight of the heifer without the calf), and have a body score of 3.3 to 3.5, "No 4s!" he said loudly.

Height is important, he said, but body score and weight are more important. Height is a variable trait, but one of the most inheritable in cattle. If the size of the parent cattle is not great, given proper nutrition, then the height of the offspring can be expected to be similar.

To get fast gains on heifers, both epxerts recommended feeding higher quantities of protein than what the NRC recommendations are.

A typical ration for a young heifer would include a 14 percent protein grain source, in addition to hay. Perkins said that instead, to promote better and faster growth, a 32-percent protein grain be used, and the grain should not be corn.

Grouping of heifers should also be done — at least four groups and more if possible, Perkins said — in order to diminish competition between different age animals which can prevent a heifer from getting proper access to food and water.

With respect to calves, Perkins also said to give colostrum as soon as possible.

"Colostrum is the No. 1 guarantee of a healthy calf." He recommended a gallon in the first two hours, "even if you have to stomach tube."

He reiterated the recommendations for calf starter being of proper composition, and warned against going with inadequate starter.

Perkins also warned against starting calves out on first cutting hay. "It is too high in fiber for a baby to digest," he said. He said to give them a "nice mixture of grass and alfalfa" second or third cutting, and free choice water from the day they are born.

Water is important Perkins said. If they don't get enough water its reduces the calf's growth potential. Also, while calves have been known to bloat on free choice water, Perkins said giving water free choice from the first prevents that. He said that waiting two weeks to offer water can result in bloating.

Both experts said that dry cow care is very important.

"If you have trouble making milk, especially peak milk, look back 60 days and say, 'What did I feed those dry cows?'"

According to Perkins, he suspects that many more problems with fresh cows and lactating cows — including mastitis, ketosis, laminitis and foot problems and rebreeding difficulties — can be traced to dry cow management.

"First be sure she's pregnant. Two, body condition should be improving or staying the same. She should not be losing weight."

Perkins said most farms should have at least two groups of dry cows, those groups should be done according to stage of lactation, or body condition.

As far as dry cow nutrition, Perkins said, "On most farms, it is the most neglected ration, but I'm convinced it is the most important ration on the farm.

"If you have trouble making milk, especially peak milk, look back 60 days and say, 'What did I feed those dry cows?'" Perkins said.

He said the number one goal should be to freshen a cow with a "sharp" appetite. That does not mean that any food should be withheld a prefresh cow. Just the opposite is true, according to the two experts.

The key in keeping a cow healthy and on feed as she goes through the calving process and freshens, is to make sure she is fed a lot of fiber (grass hay) that has below 1.2 percent potassium content.

"Please put up enough quality hay to feed to a prefresh group for a year," Perkins said.

The concept is that bulk in the rumen and abomasum will keep those organs stretched to normal capacity during the pre-fresh period and immediately afterward, when the cow normally reduces feed intake.

Perkins compared it to eating a large meal and then being hungry the next day. It is because the stomach is stretched out from the large meal and as it empties, "wants" to be filled back to that volume.

Specifically, Perkins said that in the lower Susquehanna Valley, Lancaster in particular, because of the high density livestock operations and the amount of manure used for fertilizer, that potassium levels in the hay are much too high to feed to upclose cows.

The reason he singled out potassium is because it interferes with the magnesium availability and the magnesium is necessary for proper muscle contractions. It also interferes with the cows normal ability to use calcium from its bones to support itself and the developing calf. "Yes, we are feeding calcium, but she has to get calcium from her bones," he said.

High potassium levels interfere with the cow's normal hormonal mechanisms which pull calcium from her bones for use during this time.

Further, though there is not scientific evidence to bear it out, he said his field observations are such that, if the potassium levels in the hay fed to prefresh dry cows is from 1.2 percent to 1.5 percent, there will probably be a higher incidence of ketosis, displaced abomasum, and they may clean, but have a pussy discharge. He said all are classic signs of high potassium intake while prefresh.

He said those who feed hay with greater than 1.5 percent potassium should use anionic salts which bind the potassium and render it benign.

Instead, however, he said the best thing to do is to sell a bunch of high quality alfalfa hay to someone in upstate New York and buy some high quality grass hay from there that was grown on land that didn't receive any manure for the past 10 years.

As far as scoring animals, Fry said that he has found a minimal, but very practical strategy for scoring. He said that, as a minimum, once a month two groups should be scored — those scheduled to be dried off within the next 30 days, and those coming fresh within the next 30 days.

"Those two groups give a report card," Fry said. "I used to score at peak milk, or through lactation, but you can't do anything about it then."

Vet: PRRS Can Be Treated Effectively With Medication, Management

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — The devastating porcine reproductive and respiratory syndrome (PRRS) virus can be controlled in swine herds simply by using methods to acclimate herd resistance to the virus through gilt and nursery management, according to a Midwest veterinarian.

Based on extensive research, Dr. Scott Dee, a veterinarian with Swine Health Center from Morris, Minn., told 75 area producers and Pfizer customers that research has uncovered methods to effectively deal with PRRS in swine herds.

Dee spoke at the annual Pfizer Swine Serviceman's Meeting on Wednesday at Yoder's Restaurant.

The PRRS virus causes a condition which suppresses a pig's immune response, allowing it to contract a host of more debilitating diseases. PRRS, once known as mystery pig disease and other names, was first identified in North Carolina in 1987. It wasn't until 1992 that researchers first isolated the virus in herds in North America.

The seminar examined the effects of research conducted by Dr. Al Sutton, animal science department at Purdue University, on N-Serve, an inhibitor added to slurry that inhibits denitrification.

The disease effects all animals in a herd. High fevers develop on the herd. The animals become off feed and lethargic and develop severe respiratory symptoms. The incidence of mortality, including abortions and stillbirths, can rise dramatically in a herd.

PRRS paves the way for other, more dangerous, diseases to affect the herd.

"It's a very frustrating disease to treat," said Dee. "Nothing seems to work." He said that researchers tried everything they could, including medication to boost immune response, to little avail.

The hope for a vaccine, some two years away, holds little promise because of the different strains of virus which can be present. Also, the virus easily mutates — changes — which makes detecting and trying to treat it even more difficult.

The key to treating PRRS, according to the veterinarian, lies in a research project that looked at two Arizona farrowing operations. In one farm, Farm A, 1,500 sows and their offspring were examined for PRRS and the effect on the herd. In a similar farm, Farm B, located within five miles of Farm A, 2,500 sows and offspring were examined.

The results were clear.

What caused the virus to take hold in Farm A was the fact that Farm A was purchasing gilts from another source. Those gilts showed no contact with the virus, and had no immunity. Farm B, which showed little effects of the virus, used in-house multipliers — gilts from its own stock that were already "acclimated" to the virus. Slowly, the herd was able to build up sufficient immunity to PRRS.

Also, research indicates that to effectively treat the virus, partial depopulation, which uses an all-in, all-out approach to the nursery (and including a recommended 7-day down time with complete cleaning and disinfecting of the nursery) was most effective in ridding the virus from the herd.

Diseases such as PRRS and Salmonella-related pneumonia, in addition to Actinobacillus pleuropneumoniae and others, must be treated early or they can cost a lot in terms of lost market value, according to Marc White, Pfizer swine species specialist, Greenfield, Ind.

This method can be used even in relatively hog-dense populations in some areas.

Facilities also have to be completely separated if they are on site. They cannot share the same air passage or hallway, according to Dee.

The important thing to remember, according to Dee, is to "work with your veterinarian really closely and use serology to make decisions on exactly what to do," he told the producers.

Also, making use of modified medicated early weaning (MMEW) can help keep PRRS and other debilitating swine diseases out of the operation.

But producers should do all they can to reduce the "challenge" to the pigs from viruses — keep the operation free of bacteria and viruses — to more effectively control diseases on the farm, according to Dee.

A form of MMEW correctly implemented by the veterinarian can translate into profits for producers, because hogs can be brought to market a month earlier with an improved average daily gain. Also, pigs will be healthier, which translates into savings on disease prevention.

MMEW centers on weaning at an earlier age — about 12-14 days — and moving pigs, if possible, off site. Because sows can transmit viruses and bacteria to pigs, it is important to get the pigs away from contact with the sows and start medication early.

If the pigs can't be moved offsite, according to Dee, then there are methods of management to separate the pigs sufficiently enough from the sows to gain good herd health protection.

One method included adopting the use of refrigerator trailer trucks and using that as the nursery. With inexpensive modifications, Dee said research has shown that biosecurity was improved and the nursery worked quite well in all stages.

Stress was kept to a minimum, even when the site was located up to seven miles away.

A careful feed and medication program was followed which translated into improvements in feed performance, average daily gain, and days to market.

Diseases such as PRRS and Salmonella-related pneumonia, in addition to Actinobacillus pleuropneumoniae and other diseases, must be treated early or they can cost a lot in terms of lost market value, according to Marc White, Pfizer swine species specialist, Greenfield, Ind. Producers need to look at how medication is important to profitability.

He spoke about using Mecadox, a Pfizer feedgrade antibacterial that can help fight disease challenges and promote rapid growth and efficient feed utilization. In trials, Mecadox helped pigs get to 75 pounds of body weight nearly four days faster than other medications and nearly 16 days faster than nonmedicated pigs.

Dr. Scott Dee, a veterinarian with Swine Health Center from Morris, Minn., told 75 area producers and Pfizer customers that research has uncovered methods to effectively deal with PRRS in swine herds. Dee spoke at the annual Pfizer Swine Serviceman's Meeting on Wednesday at Yoder's Restaurant.

Also, the MMEW program at the University of Minnesota utilized by Dee made use of the injectable antibiotic from Pfizer, Liquamycin LA-200.

Other topics at the seminar examined the effects of research conducted by Dr. Al Sutton, animal science department at Purdue University, on N-Serve, an inhibitor added to slurry that inhibits denitrification, allowing nitrogen to be present for crop utilization. Also, Sutton spoke about the importance of knifing or injecting fertilizer to hold down volatization, denitrification, runoff, and leaching at manure application time.

Farm Bureau To Meet With Legislators

CAMP HILL (Cumberland Co.) — The unified voice of more than 23,500 Pennsylvania farmers will be heard in Washington D.C. when leaders of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau meet with their members of congress on March 2-3 to discuss legislative priorities.

About 200 farmers — members of county farm bureau national legislative committees — will be visiting with their U.S. representatives and senators to talk about issues that are affecting farmers and to recommend action based on grass roots policies developed by the organization.

Issues to be discussed during Farm Bureau's annual Washington Legislative Tour will include the GATT treaty, USDA reorganization, health care reform, reauthorization of the Clean Water Act, wetlands policy, and a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. A brief background on the issues and Farm Bureau's position follows:

• Because future U.S. farm productivity is certain to outpace domestic demand, export markets are important to agriculture. The Uruguay Round of trade talks on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT), which governs world trade, has been completed after seven years of negotiations. It will cut subsidized agricultural exports by 21-percent and reduce import protection by 36-percent over six years starting in 1995. It will also reduce some internal trade-distorting supports by 20-percent and prevent use of sanitary regulations as disguised trade barriers. Farm Bureau supports the objectives of the GATT negotiations but will withhold its final position until all details of the agreement become known. Congress will vote up or down on implementing legislation for the agreement this summer.

• Secretary Mike Espy has presented a proposal to reorganize USDA, paring it down from 43 to 29 agencies and closing or consolidating 1,300 county offices. A new Farm Service Administration would be created by merging the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) and the Farmers Home Administration (FmHA). Farm Bureau is concerned that USDA has been singled out when the efficiency of all federal agencies should be under scrutiny. In addition, Farm Bureau believes soil and water conservation programs should be included in the Farm Service Agency rather than placed in a separate agency. Local farmer-elected committees should have oversight of Farm Service Agency commodity programs and activities.

• There are seven major plans for health care reform before Congress, including President Clinton's. Farm Bureau strongly opposes all mandatory systems, and instead supports market-based reforms of the current system with emphasis on provisions for farmers including a 100-percent tax deduction of health insurance premiums for the self-employed and tax breaks for medical savings accounts. Farm Bureau also favors promotion of wellness and preventative care programs, minimal government intervention in the health care system, direct assistance for the poor, and proper compensation for Medicare and Medicaid providers.

• Congress is expected to rewrite the 1972 Clean Water Act this year and is under pressure to increase regulation of "nonpoint" sources including farm runoff. Farm Bureau believes nonpoint source pollution programs should be designed, controlled, and implemented by state and local governments, not the federal government. The programs should emphasize the voluntary adoption of best management practices and should not be mandatory. Cost-sharing, grants, and technical assistance to landowners are essential for success.

• Farm Bureau also wants to make sure that a rewrite of the Clean Water law includes the reform of wetlands provisions contained in Section 404. Farm Bureau wants changes to balance the protection of wetlands with private property rights, including compensation for landowners who lose economic use of their land and the classification of wetlands according to their value. The exclusion from regulation of

Dry Cow Management

He said that scoring cows before drying them off gives a good indication of how well they regained body condition after the first lactation, and it also gives a report on how well the dry cow ration and treatment is doing.

If there is a loss of body score from pre-dry to pre-fresh, then there is something wrong with the management of the dry cow, which both men said is the key to ensuring a high producing, healthy herd.

The dairy consultants addressed a number of other issues, such as using coccidiostats, ionophores, when to call the vet, and comparisons of feed costs.

That information is also contained on the video tape, available through the Extension offices in either Lebanon or Lancaster counties.

The theme of the next Lancaster County Dairy Day is to be herd health programs to meet the needs of high producing cows with emphasis on udder health, immunity, vaccines, and Johnes disease.

National DHIA To Honor Several At Annual Convention

of work at the state, regional and national levels of DHIA. That involvement included being a national director for six years, as well as serving as vice president for one year.

The award itself, named posthumously in honor of the past National DHIA president, is an annual recognition of those serving in leadership who have demonstrated outstanding and unselfish service for many years, and who the National DHIA board of directors feel has made a notable contribution to the advancement of DHIA in the United States.

Noble served from 1980 to 1988 on the New York DHIC Board, was elected its president in 1986 and 1987, and during that time he was instrumental in the formation of Northeast DHIA, bring together New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine.

Noble served on a number of national DHIA committees, including chairing the Labor Efficient Records Committee. This committee created the successful innovative testing plans project, which made great strides in linking electronic on-farm meters and computers to the DHI system.

His contributions to the value of records issue brought about a greater understanding in the dairy industry of the flow and significance of DHIA data, and the importance of an integrated dairy records industry.

He was active in the formation of the DHIA Services subsidiary in 1988 and served on that board from 1990 to 1992.

The Martin A. Wilson Award being presented to Sam Chafin is bestowed upon a person who is, or has been, employed by an affiliate DHIA in a management position for at least five years, and in the opinion of the selection committee of peers, has been dedicated to the improvement of, and provided leadership to, the advancement of DHIA.

Chafin began his DHIA career in July 1981, as an area manager in Shenandoah Valley, Va. ONe of his many achievements as an area manager was development of the statewide meter calibration program, which helped establish Virginia as a center of excellence in accurate DHIA records.

His work with Va.DHIA's Long Range Planning Committee and with adjusting DHI rates has helped build a framework for farmers, resulting in better service to DHI members in Virginia and North Carolina.

Since accepting the state manager position for the Virginia Federation of DHIAs in 1989, Chafin has guided the federation through a continuous period of change, with steadily decreasing number of dairy farmers in the urban areas of Virginia's eastern corridor.

In addition, he helped guide Blue Ridge DHIA Laboratory through a period of considerable change, culminating in a merger of lab services with North Carolina.

Last year, the entire DHIA operations of Virginia and North Carolina were brought together under United DHIA.

According to Eubert Correll, president of United DHIA, "The stability of DHIA services to dairy producers in Virginia and North Carolina has improved dramatically in the past two years due to Chafin's tireless efforts to merge the two states into one United DHIA."

The National DHIA Outstanding Service Award is presented to a DHIA manager, university worker or dairy industry person who, in the opinion of the National DHIA board of directors, has been dedicated to the improvement of, and has provided notable leadership to, the advancement of DHIA over the years.

Although Dr. Butcher has served as director of DRPC at Raleigh since April 1984, he has been involved with almost every facet of the DHI program offered by Raleigh since 1969.

His contributions to the dairy industry in computer technology have been significant. While at Raleigh, he oversaw the development of the Direct Access to Records by Telephone (DART) system. This system allows access to the processing center's computing file via on-farm terminals and allows the farmer to update his DHI records daily.

The DART program grew to include PCDART, an on-farm software system based on periodic access to the DRPC. As a result of these programs, dairy producers have unlimited access to their own farm management information without incurring major on-line telephone costs.

Other computer programs Butcher has been instrumental in developing include Total Program Entry (TPE), a software package for use by DHIA technicians; CAS, an accounting program for state DHIA affiliates to manage their finances with little duplication of entry, CD DART, an on-line access program for consultants; and DART-SAS, a statistical package for use with DHIA data for education-research efforts.

One of Butcher's early contributions was his development of a milkfat variance program for monitoring milkfat tests run by DHI technicians.

Butcher has served on many National DHIA committees, including the first Quality Certification Committee, which boosted the consistency of DHIA records.

In 1993, Raleigh was the first processing center to complete programming for a standard transfer format, allowing a complete electronic transfer of a cow's or herd's data from one center to another.

In his 25 years of service to the dairy industry, Butcher has addressed numerous groups in the United States and several foreign countries and authored at least 40 scientific and general articles.

Nutrient Management Meeting Set

NEW HOLLAND (Lancaster Co.) — On Wednesday, March 2, the Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council and Penn State Cooperative Extension are providing an educational seminar and "hands on" workshop to assist you in your nutrient management planning at Yoder's Restaurant, New Holland, from 9 a.m. - 2:30 p.m.

Environmental issues play a major role in decisions made on farms today. The recent enactment of nutrient management legislation in Pennsylvania will affect your swine operation. It is important for you to know your role in nutrient management planning.

Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council President Abe Fisher said, "Nutrient management may be the most important issue facing pork producers during the next five years."

Topics included in the seminar include "Concepts of Nutrient Management," "Nutrient Management Bill Requirements," and "Alternatives with Nutrient Management."

Bring your calculator to aid you in a simple assessment of your nutrient situation. A lunch will be provided, and your only cost is a $3 registration fee.

Mark March 2 on your calendar and call Abe Fisher on Saturday, Feb. 26 at (717) 768-8378 or Monday morning, Feb. 28 at (717) 768-3301 to make your reservation.

Dairylea Members To Chair YC Program

Sharon and David Smith, Dairlea members from Middleport, N.Y., will chair the National Milk Producers Federation's 1994 Young Cooperator Advisory Council.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Young Cooperators from across the region elected David and Sharon Smith, Dairylea members from Middleport, N.Y., to chair the National Milk Producers Federation's (NMPF's) 1994 Young Cooperator (YC) Advisory Council.

The Smiths were selected from 72 other young farm couples at the NMPF's Annual Meeting this winter in New Orleans, La.

"The YC program is a leadership program designed to educate and develop tomorrow's dairy leaders," David explained. The Smiths said they had a wonderful time in New Orleans, especially talking and meeting with people from across the country and getting new ideas.

"We really enjoyed meeting other young farmers who are interested in milk promotion, producing quality milk and furthering the positive image of the dairy industry," Sharon said.

The Smiths milk 60 cows and farm 250 acres in Niagara County.

High Tunnel Systems May Provide Earlier, Greater Yields

crops. The tunnel produced about 2,000 pounds of fresh market tomatoes which were sold at an average price of $1.60 a pound. The cost of the tunnel, which included all lumber, labor, transplants, mulch, trickle irrigation equipment, and other materials, was about $977.

Sales of tomatoes from the tunnel reached about $3,200, for a net of about $1,423. The system paid off the costs of the tunnel in the first year.

"There are not many systems that you can get complete payback in the first year," said Wells.

Where field tomatoes will average about 1½ pounds of tomatoes at harvest per square foot, the tunnel tomatoes, with their longer growing season, average about 3.5 pounds per square foot from July through September.

"The high tunnel almost doubled the per square foot yield of tomatoes," he said.

Other crops that can be readily grown in the tunnel include summer squash, melons, cucumbers, peppers, cut flowers, strawberries, all sorts of spring and fall crops, and "niche" market items.

Wells said that tunnel systems are used extensively in such countries as South Korea (22 acres in production), Spain (10,000 acres), Israel, and southern European countries.

"We have very few high tunnels in this country," said Wells. "And I don't understand why.

"There's always someone trying to get something earlier, and better, and faster," he said. "Not necessarily trying to compete with a neighbor, but simply to have it earlier, for an earlier marketing opportunity."

According to Wells, the ideal situation for use of a tunnel would be for fresh market vegetables, but wholesale could be a possibility, depending on market demand. For farmers that can set aside a couple of acres or even less, this high-production farming could prove immensely beneficial.

The tunnel operation is similar to a greenhouse. A typical greenhouse is Quonset-shaped utilizing two 6-mil layers of plastic with a permanent heating and ventilation system. The tunnel, however, is similar in look, but utilizes only one 6-mil layer of plastic, relies on heat from the sun, and ventilation is provided by rolling up the sides.

The location of the site is important. The soil quality and drainage should be good quality, and the site needs access to water. The site should be away from other sheds and greenhouses. If growing tomatoes, the site should be far enough away from field tomatoes to prevent disease and insect crossover.

The greenhouse should be situated in a north-south direction so that westerly winds blow across the sides of the tunnel.

Good ventilation is necessary, according to Wells. "Ventilation is crucial to tomato growth," he said. "You need to open the tunnel early every morning, because the temperature and humidity are going to be factors that we cannot control any other way. You do not want excessive temperature building up."

He said he opens the tunnel at 7-7:30 each morning and closes it at the same time each night. It is important to close it regularly at night to keep the heat in.

To construct the tunnel, size is important. The wider the tunnel,

Dr. Otho Wells, extension vegetable specialist with the University of New Hampshire, spoke about the results of trials using high tunnel production on Monday at the New Holland Vegetable Day.

the higher the sides. Many growers use a 14-foot wide tunnel by 96-feet long as standard. The best system uses the following, based on results at the University of New Hampshire:

- Used galvanized metal bows for construction. PVC pipe can wear and break after a time.
- Use portable ends, to make working inside easier and to allow sufficient ventilation in the hot summer months.
- Place the clear 6-mil plastic over top of the canopy, and allow about a foot longer on each sides.
- Secure the tunnel plastic with batten board and hip board. Sandwich the plastic between the two boards. Use "plenty of screws," he said, to make sure the plastic is held firmly. The plastic may tear if the screws aren't close enough together.
- Using a galvanized pipe that runs the length of the tunnel, secure this with duct tape to the ends of the cover. This will be used to roll up the sides of the tunnel. The university uses a "sliding T-angle" to use as a take-up for the sides, which allows the sides to be rolled up and down quickly.
- Incorporate proper nutrients based on soil sample. Prepare the soil as you would a field crop. Disc, till, and work until competely smooth.
- Use one row of trickle irrigation line for each row of tomatoes.
- Place down a 6-mil black plastic mulch cover over the entire area. It is important that all the soil is covered and that the area is completely smooth.
- Transplants should be about 5-6 weeks old, in 4-inch pots, ready to transplant 3-4 weeks earlier than outside. Use plenty of phosphorous starter ferilizer for good root growth. Place plans in a four-row system, 3½ feet apart, with 18 inches between plants.
- Use 4-foot stakes and place in a sequence of two plants, then stake, then two plants. Use twine and string up in a "Florida basketweave" system to support stems. Start the basketweave system early so that plants don't start flopping and falling over, said Wells.

It is important to make sure the sides are rolled up early in the morning and down at night each day in order to keep excessive heat and humidity from building up. Also, the plants must be kept free of rain to suppress disease formation. On days with excessive heat (more than 87 degrees for two hours at a time), open doors and sides wide.

He has encountered problems with white fly. "If you see one white fly, go for it," said Wells. The university uses a bioinsecticidal soap, which he said works well.

Weeds are suppressed through the use of black plastic mulch.

But one disease that can attack the crop is early blight.

"The number one way to control diseases in a greenhouse or tunnel is sanitation," said Wells. He said that when the crop is finished, clean up all debris and "don't leave anything on the soil."

He showed slides of where, in one case, near a field with evidence of early blight, the tunnel tomatoes were not affected.

"Do not plant field tomatoes beside your high tunnel," he said.

He said the tunnel system protected plants from frost and even cold temperatures, down to 28 degrees at night.

Wells said that tomatoes should be rotated out every two years from the tunnel system.

Wells said he believes there is a home for tunnel ventilation in Pennsylvania. One New England grower produced about 3,000 pounds of tomatoes in a tunnel in the first year.

"If you can grow tomatoes in tunnels in Spain and Israel and South Korea, we can do it here or anywhere in the United States," he said.

Mulches

Wells also said that for growers who want to use mulches but want biodegradability, it may be possible to use the black kraft-like paper now being tested at the university.

There is a paper called Planter's Paper made by Kinbar, out of Reading, Mass., that shows a great deal of promise in biodegradability and standability for the duration of field crops.

He said there are three types of mulches — organic, plastic, and paper — and all three work to provide the two most important things for growers: soil warming and weed control.

The mulch used by many growers is the raw plastic material called polyethylene.

When manufactured, polyethylene is a clear plastic. To obtain black plastic, a black material in beed form is added.

Clear plastic is used only when a good weed control program is put in place. While there is better warming with clear plastic, the black plastic provides better weed suppression.

Photodegradable mulches allow ultraviolet (UV) light to slowly break the molecular bonds, which causes the plastic to slowly deterioriate.

The only problem is that the edges of the photodegradable mulches, buried in the soil, don't decompose. This creates a residue management problem in the fields.

Biodegradable mulches are starch-based, which break down with bacterial action. But many vary greatly in how long they take to finally break down, depending on field and weather conditions.

The biodegradable cover with the most promise, according to Wells, is the black paper. In yield trials, it performed as well as the black plastic, but is slightly more expensive.

Wells also examined the IRT plastic mulches, which allows infrared, or warming light, to pass through while blocking UV light. This controls weeds most of the time more effectively because of the UV blocking.

On yield trials, IRT worked as well as clear and much better than black.

Disease highlights

Late blight on tomatoes may become more evident during the 1994 growing season, according to Dr. Alan MacNab, Penn State extension, who presented disease highlights at the Vegetable Day.

He said that more resistant spores of tomato late blight may show up during the 1994 growing season.

Late blight resembles early blight. Early blight starts with the older leaves toward the bottom of the tomato plant. But late blight affects leaves on all parts of the plant.

He said that Penn State will watch the disease closely and be in touch with extension offices to recommend and review control programs for growers.

He told the growers that it is important to rotate crops and follow good control programs to keep disease, insect, and weed pressures down.

In one study, he showed that when dew was reduced on tomatoes, early blight was effectively controlled.

The Vegetable Day included a variety of other sessions on greenhouse biosecurity, integrated nutrient management for tomatoes, weed management strategies, greenhouse insect ID, vegetable crop budgeting, pumpkin variety trials, greenhouse IPM, tailgate farmers markets, soil fumigation, herb production, packaging quality vegetables, pesticide container recycling, and others.

PSU, Cornell Offer Dairy Expansion Conference

LEHAN R. POWER
Area Farm Management Agent
Bradford PSU Extension

TOWANDA (Bradford Co.) — Attention dairy farmers, extension staff, agricultural lenders, builders, equipment dealers, and veterinarians! Mark your calendars for an important regional conference, "Expansion Strategies for Dairy Farms: Facilities and Financial Planning," to be held on March 29 and 30, in Sayre.

The conference is being planned by faculty at Penn State and Cornell Universities, with assistance from the Northeast Regional Agricultural Engineering Services (NRAES).

"Many farmers are at a crossroads," said Robert E. Graves, professor in the Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering at Penn State. "They're having to decide whether to make major changes to their facilities to stay competitive and modern into the 21st century. This conference gives them a chance to review their option."

Dairy farmers must consider the long-term effects expansion will have on their finances, the health and productivity of their cows, the efficiency and comfort of their workers, and the surrounding environment.

"Expansion Strategies for Dairy Farms" will bring together experts on these issues and more so that dairy farmers and others involved in the expansion process will be better able to make sound decisions.

Presentations will focus on incremental expansion as a strategy to ensure the debt load is reasonable when compared to anticipated cash flow.

Everyone involved in the expansion process should benefit from this educational experience. Dairy farmers and managers considering dairy farm expansion can learn about the many facets of planning and executing a successful expansion, from financing to manure management plans.

Extension agents, facilities planners, engineers, builders, and equipment suppliers will learn up-to-date techniques for selecting free stall floor plans, ventilation systems, milking center designs, and materials.

Financial and management advisors and veterinarians will improve their ability to evaluate proposed dairy facilities.

The conference will begin with a series of case studies. Several dairy farmers will detail the pros and cons of their experiences with expansion.

The remainder of the conference will consist of 25-minute presentations from specialists in dairy facilities, agricultural lending, facilities planning, manure handling, and construction.

Informal discussion periods will be interspersed with the presentations to allow participants time to talk with speakers and each other about specific concerns and issues.

Presentations are to be given by dairy facility engineers, facilities planners, animal scientists, agricultural economists, a lender, a veterinarian, and environmental engineers.

Experts from Penn State and Cornell University will share their knowledge and answer your questions concerning dairy expansions.

The conference was planned by a committee chaired by Robert E. Graves, professor, Department of Agricultural and Biological Engineering, Penn State University.

The conference will be held at the Guthrie Inn and Conference Center, located at 255 Spring Street in Sayre. Sayre is in northeastern Pennsylvania on the New York border, just off NYS Route 17. To get to the conference from the south, take Route 220 to Route 17 east. From Route 17, take Exit 61 and turn right; the hotel is on the right, about 200 feet from the exit.

A block of rooms at the Guthrie Inn and Conference Center has been reserved for conference participants. The rate is $58 for single or double rooms. Reservations can be made by calling (800) 627-7972. Reserve your room by March 15 and mention "Expansion Strategies for Dairy Farms" to receive the special rate.

The registration fee for the conference is $110 if postmarked by March 16 and $130 after March 16 or for walk-ins.

The fee includes admission to the conference, two lunches, break refreshments, and a 300-plus-page notebook of information related to dairy expansions. Reduced rates are not available for groups or for single-day attendance.

For a brochure containing a complete conference agenda, a map to the conference, and a registration form, contact NRAES, Cooperative Extension, 152 Riley-Robb Hall, Ithaca, NY 14853-5701, or call (607) 255-7654.

Myers Fills York Dairy Extension Role

JOYCE BUPP
York Co. Correspondent

YORK (York Co.) — By the end of the month of January, Jerry Myers planned to have visited nearly half of York County's 126 dairy farms. But continuing weeks of bad weather snarled the dairy extension agent's progress in meeting his goal.

Jerry Myers joined the York Agricultural Extension staff as dairy agent on November 15. Having paid calls on more than 30 milk producers during his first several weeks of work, Myers hopes for improved weather during the next several weeks to catch up on his self-imposed goal of personally visiting every York County dairy farm.

"A lot of our upcoming program development is still in the planning stages," says the dairy agent. "But I do want to meet as many farmers as possible. People appreciate getting to know the person behind the position; they're more likely to call if they have a question or a problem. Having worked in extension before, I know how important it is to know the farmers.

"The list of things that we could to is never ending," Myers says of extension owrk, then emphasizing, "But I wanted to have visited 50 farms by the end of January."

He sees escalating regulations as being the biggest challenge faced by farmers.

"As agriculture becomes more limited in numbers, so does our legislative voice. We get so busy just doing what has to be done. Agriculture's voice must be heard." Myers insists.

Even as a teenager growing up on his family's farm, Myers remembers having a sense that he would make career choices based on people-oriented job opportunities.

"I always thought I'd be doing something working with people," relates Jerry Myers. "Other people always gave me support for thinking in that direction."

Myers and his sister and brothers were the third generation on the family dairy farm near Westminster, Maryland. As they grew up, the Myers siblings were all quite successful in showing their registered Holstein cattle and in 4-H showmanship, judging, and record book activities.

Keeping the people-oriented-job future in mind, Jerry earned his degree in ag extension education at the University of Maryland. Following graduation, he worked for two years as a Northeast field representative for the national Brown Swiss and Ayrshire cattle organizations.

"I put in lots of road time," he recalls of the position in which he worked with members of the two breed groups in 10 states across the middle Atlantic and New England areas.

Returning to school for a Master's degree, Myers began his graduate studies at the School For International Training at Brattleboro, Vermont. He found the small, personalized setting, with between 100-200 students, many of them foreign students pursuing English studies, to be interesting, enlightening and a lot of fun.

"A requirement of my program in International Administration, specializing in advising and training, was to do an internship. I thought it would be interesting to evaluate agriculture at an international level," he explains.

So, after his six months of on-campus studies, Jerry Myers took a three-week "crash" course in Spanish, then packed his bags to spend the next eight months in Colombia, South America. His assignment was with the national Brown Swiss association, classifying cattle, teaching dairy farm owners how to use sire summary information in mating programs and various advisory and training programs that dovetailed with his graduate program.

Myers was even asked to judge several shows during his stay, the first only about six weeks after his arrival. Though his Spanish, including the numerous cow descriptive terms, was still rather halting, Myers managed to announce his reasons for each class with no major language embarrassments.

York County dairy extension agent Jerry Myers makes friends with a calf while on a farm visit.

"It was nice to be able to speak without having to resort to the use of an interpreter," he says in retrospect of his sudden immersion into having to manage public speaking in a foreign language.

Living in Colombia also emphasized to Myers that people around the world are really very much the same. Too often, he believes, the media focuses only on extremes in other countries, when in reality, normal daily family lives are very similar to those of Americans.

After concluding his graduate program, Jerry returned home for six months to help with running the home dairy and crops operation while his older brother, Jason, was relocating his herd from the family farm to begin his own dairy operation.

During the summer of 1984, Myers was asked to lead a national 4-H youth tour to The Netherlands. For six months after his college graduation, he had lived in Norway as a participant in the 4-H's International Foreign Youth Exchange (IFYE) program.

"I love to travel," Myers quickly admits. At 16, he had spent a month in Europe as a member of Maryland's national dairy judging team, touring and practicing for international competition.

After returning from the Netherlands visit, Myers accepted a position with Delaware Valley College. He was assistant professor in the dairy science department, teaching, coaching the dairy judging team, coordinating DVC's cattle show participation, and in charge of the breeding program for the college's Holstein, Brown Swiss and Ayrshire herds.

"I loved working with the students and got a lot of support from them," he says of the challenge and enjoyment of college teach-

Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Board Holds Annual Meeting

GAIL STROCK
Mifflin Co. Correspondent

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — "We want to sell more dairy products and improve the dairy farmer's bottom line."

That's how Karl Kroeck from Knoxville, Chairman of the Commodity Marketing Board of the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program (PDPP) summed up the purpose of the program. Over 100 industry and county dairy promotion representatives, including farmers, gathered at the Nittany Lion Inn in State College on Monday, February 7 for the annual meeting and 10th anniversary of the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program. In short, they came to hear how the farmers' milk check check-off dollars were being put to use.

"We want to inform dairy producers about their investment in dairy promotion," says Brian Ross, Program Manager. "This meeting will reflect Pennsylvania Dairy's 10 years of activities conducted on behalf of Pennsylvania dairy farmers to promote milk and dairy products in the state."

Ross, in his fourth year as manager, said he and his staff tries to work the areas where we can make a difference. The advertising campaign targets the 25-54 acre group and is not, Ross reminded those attending, aimed at farmers. The PDPP targets schools for nutrition education and larger areas of consumption such as cities. Ross said any phone call ideas they receive in the office are presented to the Board.

In his Chairman's address, Kroeck said the PDPP is working with other organizations, mainly the American Dairy Association Dairy Council (ADADC) and the Mideast United Dairy Industry Association/F.O. 36 Advertising Agency, to get the most for the advertising dollars. Kroeck said things are changing so rapidly. One thousand farms were lost last year in Pennsylvania.

"Pennsylvania is down to 52,000 farms. Cooperation is the only practical solution to bring the whole industry together (to promote dairy products)."

Kroeck said the purpose of promoting the dairy industry's products is to close the gap between production and consumption. "Let's see dairy product demand exceed production!"

In Pennsylvania, over $1.3 million in operating revenues each year flow from the dairyman's milk check to the PDPP for product promotion. Of this, 60.8% or $773,545 are used for purchasing media advertising, mostly for fluid milk, cheese, and sports marketing. 10.4% goes to active dairy promotion committees in 43 counties across Pennsylvania. The remaining balance is spent on consumer marketing, communications, nutrition education, and administrative operations. Treasurer Robert Gehman from Coopersburg presented the financial report.

Promotions' Committee Chairman Harold Shaulis of Somerset presented The 1993 "Promoter of the Year" award to Julia C. Myers of Franklin County for her outstanding efforts for dairy promotion. Shaulis and Myers applies enthusiasm and professionalism in her seven years of activities. Myers received an engraved plaque and a $100 cash award. The purpose of this award is to identify those people who work to improve the public's perceptions about dairy products and the dairy industry. The Pennsylvania Dairy Board acknowledges the tremendous support that these hard-working volunteers provide to the entire dairy promotion effort. Myers was raised on a dairy farm, married, and is now working in an agricultural industry. Myers thanked the agri-businesses of Franklin County for generously giving matching funds for use in dairy promotion.

Three board members accepted recognition for serving on the board since its inception. Don Cook of Drums, Richard Shellenberger of Manheim, and Beverly Minor of Eighty Four received gold pens for their ten years of service. Don Cook said he is proud of what has been accomplished. Richard Shellenberger said he remembers the first board meeting where ideas were formulated and refined and refocused. Bev Minor was needed out of town and could not attend the meeting.

The morning session concluded with motivational and humorous thoughts from Harry Houston, formerly of the Tennessee Farmers Cooperative. Houston urged farmers to pull together to keep the tools of your trade from being taken from you - the use of fertilizers and pesticides, for example. If not, Houston said, "You won't be able to produce food like you are now to feed us and the world."

The PDPP 1993 Marketing Campaign

Program manager Brian Ross presented the afternoon session. He and his staff, Communications Director Elizabeth (Betsy) A. Dupuis, Promotions Specialist Nadine J. Houck, and Program Assistant Jennifer S. Dobyns reported on what the board has done in 1993.

Sports marketing included radio, billboard, television, and personal appearances featuring the All-American Pittsburgh Pirate Jay Bell. Pennsylvania dairy commercials could be seen during breaks in the televised PSU Nittany Lion football games, as well as football snack days and Blue Band member appearances to show how milk does a body good. Sixty-five stations participate in the Penn State Sports Network.

Ice cream promotions linked up with Hershey food toppings to make those who watched "feel like a kid again" while Sam Scoop gave the scoop on radio.

The National Cheese campaign centered on TV advertisements and instore promotions which have been shown to increase cheese sales by as much as 30%.

Aunt Emma took to the microphone in central and northeast Pennsylvania for radio spots to announce that only real dairy products deliver results. Her recipes are in local newspapers and plans are in motion for a special Aunt Emma holiday promotional.

Healthy snacking is the focus of dairy nutrition education in elementary schools through Snack Stars and Snack Trek. Classroom tested programs offer kids hands-on activities. School breakfast programs center on the ideas that today's children are tomorrow's milk drinkers. Kids learn that breakfast and school are cool and important for success.

The PDPP and its co-sponsors reach consumers directly at grocery and convenience stores through colorful displays, posters and materials.

In spring, PDPP joins with the Prom Promise promoters for a "Cheers" campaign, offering high school students a non-alcholic alternative to drinking. This public service announcement was used by 40 stations across Pennsylvania.

The Pennsylvania Farm Show's 800-pound life size butter sculpture drew the attention of most of the 230,000 people attending the show. The Cable News Network televised it worldwide. An ice cream "Scooper Bowl" was also held at the Farm Show. Dairy Fun Night at the Farm Show featured a milk mustache contest and a "churning and turning" for homemade ice cream contest. For the milking contest, participants had to not only milk the cow, but shake a portion of the milk into butter. Ross emphasized that Farm Show media coverage is free coverage.

June as Dairy Month saw celebrities milking cows in Pittsburgh, Dairy Day festivities in Lancaster, ice cream contests at Altoona's Blands Park, an ice cream serenade in Philadelphia, an ice cream safari in Erie, and real milk product banners for the Harrisburg Senators baseball games.

Planning and Development for 1994

Tara Gillies, Account Executive for D'Arcy, Masius, Benton, and Bowles, Inc., an advertising agency, stepped to the podium to outline the 1994 fluid milk advertising campaign. The "It Shows" campaign began in February of 1993 and is a strong campaign involving high consumer awareness. Next year's program will be heavy into self-enhancement, physical health, and emotional health.

The "Milk. It Does a Body Good" Campaign will continue. Other advertising will center on the core idea "When you drink milk it shows."

Two new 30-second television commercials have begun airing - one labeled "country" and the other "urban".

On a national level, Gillies reported that all of the major networks, ABC, CBS, and NBC, air milk commercials during their evening programs. Dairy product advertising can also be seen during prime time shows like "60 Minutes". National advertising campaigns are scheduled for the Winter Olympics.

Overall, Gillies said, 2.8 million Pennsylvania consumers (from the target audience) will see/hear a milk message 80 times throughout the year - an average of three times a week.

Dauphin DHIA Meets

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Dauphin County Dairy Herd Improvement Association recently held its annual meeting at the Western Sizzlin Steak House in Harrisburg.

Chairman Leon Crissinger, of Gratz, welcomed attendees and reported on the changes and transactions affecting local members. Crissinger said that there are 47 herds with 3,500 cows on test in Dauphin County.

DHIA Technician James Batz, of Annville, was recognized for outstanding job performance. Christine Faust, of Millersburg, was introduced as the newest DHIA technician. Faust tests herds in upper Dauphin County and Batz works with herds in the southern portion of the county.

Galen Lehman, of Middletown, was elected to the board of directors. The others on the board are Tom Tobias, of Halifax; Ty Long, of Hershey; Mike Miller, of Harrisburg; Dale Faust, of Halifax; and Leon Crissinger, of Gratz.

In other business, David Shenk, regional DHIA manager from Perry County, told members about the computerization of production data collection. Dean Amick, director of Pa.DHIA field services, talked about business decisions regarding the state office and reported that David Slusser has been made manager of the state association.

In production recognition, the 53-head, registered Holstein herd owned by Leonard and Marie Switzer was recognized as being the 1993 high herd for milk production, with 25,232 pounds. The switzer's herd was also recognized as being the high herd for protein production, with an average of 784 pounds. The couple also received the top herd management award among the county association.

Frank Greybill Jr., of Hershey, was honored for his herd's top average butterfat production of 784 pounds, while Leroy Reihl, of Gratz, had the herd with the lowest average somatic cell county.

Chester Dairymen To Hold Sale For 4-H Center

WEST CHESTER (Chester Co.) — Chester County dairy farmers are joining the campaign to raise funds for the Romano 4-H Center of Chester County.

They will have a sale of donated dairy animals on Saturday, April 2, at 11 a.m. at Solanco Fairgrounds in Quarryville.

Members of the sale committee have been contacting dairy farmers and have received over 30 Ayrshire, Holstein and Jersey animals plus other contributions to date. When the calves and heifers are sold, the proceeds will be given to the 4-H Center Building Fund.

The goal of the sale committee is to have a sale with minimum expenses so that practically all of the income can go to this worthy cause. To achieve this goal, many people are donating their time.

Leon Kurtz, Cochranville, will be the auctioneer, committee members will haul the animals to the sale, the fair committee is charging very little for the use of their facilities, and 4-H members and leaders will prepare the animals to be sold.

Chester County ranks fifth in Pennsylvania in the sale of dairy products, and the continued prosperity of the dairy industry is contingent on today's youth being tomorrow's farmers.

The new 4-H Center will be home to all 4-H youth and their families in Chester County.

4-H Club meetings, shows, sales, roundups, and other activities will be held at the center. It will eventually provide a meeting place for large Extension meetings and, when not in use by Cooperative Extension, it would be available for use by community groups.

Currently, it is necessary to conduct many of these events in non-central locations, often outside of Chester County and at rental facilities. This has resulted in a loss of identity for the 4-H program and a lost opportunity for youth to work and play together.

The total 4-H Center fund-raising campaign from all sources is aimed at raising $750,000 for construction of facilities. The dairy industry's contribution through this sale will not only raise some funds toward this goal, but will also signify their commitment to the youth in the county.

The opportunity to undertake the development of a 4-H Center has been made possible by a most generous donation of 15 acres of land by the estate and heirs of Fiorre A. Romano of West Brandywine Township. The land is along Route 322 between Guthriesville and Honeybrook.

The sale committee of 14 dairy farmers from all areas of Chester County is co-chaired by John St. John of Lincoln University (869-8745) and Mildred Seeds of Downingtown (269-0759). Anyone interested in donating a dairy animal or offering other contributions should contact the chairpersons.

PASA Conference Offers Glimpse Of Future

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — Five hundred farmers, consumers, environmentalists, agricultural agency personnel and others attended the 3rd annual Farming for the Future conference held recently in State College, PA. Presented by the Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture (PASA), the theme for this years' conference was "Sustaining Agriculture and the Environment."

Keynote speakers for the event were Greg Watson, former Massachusetts Commissioner of Agriculture and Will Baker, President and CEO of the Chesapeake Bay Foundation. Both gave numerous examples of the ways that farmers and environmentalists are working together to protect our natural resources. From pesticide regulation and Integrated Pest Management to composting and water quality protection, both Baker and Watson made it clear that sustainable agriculture is a major factor in true environment protection.

Farmers Joel Salatin of Swoope, VA and Lorna McMahon of Tiptonville, TN offered real life evidence of the linkage between sustainable farming practices and environmental protection and enhancement. The Salatin family raises beef, broilers, eggs and rabbits on 550 Shendandoah Valley acres, of which 455 are wooded. Using intensive rotational grazing, composted manures, direct marketing and forest management, the Salatins have developed a system which encourages wildlife and biodiversity and allows them to farm profitably without synthetic chemicals of any kind.

Lorna McMahon and her family raise organic cotton, soybeans, wheat, spelt, vegetables, fruit and Christmas trees on 2300 acres in the Mississippi Delta. Through aggressive wildlife habitat protection and tree planting programs, McMahon has seen the reentry of bald eagles on her farm and actually had chicks hatch out last year. She has also found that organic cotton production is far more lucrative than conventional cotton growing.

In the news, we frequently hear how bleak farming is in the US and here in Pennsylvania. However, the 500 conference participants who came together to hear speakers, attend workshops and participate in panels displayed a rare vitality and commitment to farming. Particularly impressive was attendance of over 100 at a workshop designed to help prospective farmers identify what is needed to "start and sustain a farm." Speakers at the beginning farmer workshop included dairy farmers Garry and Linda VanDeWeert of Athens, Pa., vegetable growers Jim Crawford of Hustontown Pa., and Ward Sinclair of Warfordsburg and fruit growers David Tait and Kim Knorr of Centre Hall. Also presenting information at the workshop were representatives of Penn State Extension, Farmers Home Administration, Farm Credit, LandLink and others.

Other conference workshops offered practical solutions to problems faced by livestock producers, graziers, vegetable and fruit growers, and crop farmers. In addition, there were discussions of CSA (Community Supported Agriculture), urban-farm links, farmers markets, lawn care, greenhouses, wholesale marketing, "ag in the classroom," and trade agreements impacting agriculture.

At the Annual Meeting, five directors were elected for three year terms to serve on the PASA Board of Directors. New directors are Teri Sorg-McNanamon, Lehigh County, Advertising Director at The New Farm magazine; Allen Matthews, Washington County truck farmer; Leslie Bresee, Bradford County dairy farmer; Lee Bentz, Adams County, Integrated Pest Management coordinator for the Pa. Dept. of Agriculture, and Carolyn Sachs, Centre County, Rural Sociology professor at Penn State University.

At the Friday evening banquet, the 2nd Pennsylvania Sustainable Agriculture Leadership Award was presented to Paul Keene, founder, in 1946, of Walnut Acres farms at Penns Creek, PA. Keene serves as a continuing inspiration to sustainable farmers across the country and around the world.

The Farming for the Future conference was sponsored by Albert's Organics, American Farmland Trust, Center for Rural Pennsylvania, Chesapeake Bay Foundation, Conklin AgroVantage, Erth-Rite, Inc., Fertrell, Headwaters Resource Conservation and Development Council, PennAg Industries Assoc., Pennsylvania Dept. of Environmental Resources, Pennsylvania Farmers Union, Penn State College of Agricultural Sciences, Rodale Institute and Walnut Acres Organic Farms.

Lancaster Sets Swine Club Meeting

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — The reorganizational meeting of the Lancaster County 4-H Swine Club will be held at 7:30 p.m., Thursday, March 10, at the Lancaster Farm and Home Center.

This countywide 4-H club has a focus on producing and marketing lean pork in a program that has timely educational efforts, member recognition, and community support opportunities.

The evening's program will include official sign-up, distribution of project books, explanation of project goals, election of officers, and introduction of leaders.

The club will hold seven meetings each year, a roundup and sale in August, and a recognition banquet in October. Members of the club will have the opportunity to participate in livestock and meats judging programs, pork bowl and public speaking competition, and the Pennsylvania Farm Show junior swine events.

ing. "There's less formality than other school settings and they are very challenging. They put you on the spot sometimes, but they have a great deal to offer. And they respect a person who takes time to listen to them and discuss their inputs as adults."

After more than five years with the college, Myers accepted a position in January 1990, as extension agent in Harford County, a move which brought him a bit closer back home. Later, his responsibility of working with adult programs in dairy, livestock, part-time farming enterprises and agronomy was expanded to include Baltimore County. He also continued coaching dairy judging teams.

"But, I'd always wondered if I should be milking cows," Myers grins. "I'd hurt my back working at home on the farm during my undergraduate years, but the thought of dairy farming was still there."

So when a college friend called him at the extension office in search of assistance in finding a farm manager, then later offered him the job, Myers accepted the challenge. He began managing the dairy operation near Port Deposit, Maryland, in January 1993, but a month later was already facing a recurrence of his back problems. Myers remained at the dairy operation through last June, then relocated back to his Bel Air, Maryland, house.

Along with his York Extension responsibilities with both youth and adult programs in dairy cattle and dairy goats, Myers consults part-time for a new education program begun by the national Holstein Foundation. His role is in planning and leading the Foundation's Young Dairy Leaders Institute, aimed at surfacing dairy leadership among Holstein members ages 22-35. The first four-day training institute, with about 100 young dairy leaders from across the country participating, was held earlier this month in Florida.

Gifted with a beautiful singing voice, Jerry Myers is in frequent demand to sing at weddings and church events. He was the soloist at the weddings of many of his Delaware Valley students and enjoys singing with barbershop quartet groups. The extension agent is also an enthusiastic collector of antiques and of "cow" items.

York County dairy extension agent Jerry Myers may be contacted at the York Agricultural Extension offices at (717) 757-9657.

WHO DO YOU LET INTO YOUR POCKETS?
(Part one of a two-part series)

Who determines what you buy? Is it you, a trusted friend, a respected business person, or is it high pressure sales people, con artists, or other people of questionable character?

Do you have a plan that guides family and farm decisions? Do your plans dictate what you buy, or are your decisions made on a whim, and are you easily swayed by passionate sales pitches of slick sales people?

For the most part, you are in control of what you need to buy. You can determine which sales people you want to talk to — and when. You can insist on references and time to check them out and time to make up your mind. Good sales people will respect your right to do this. They'll respect your time, and they'll try to find out what your interests and goals are so they can work with you as a long-term, trusted team player.

Let's discuss some ideas which may serve as guidelines for spending your hard earned dollars wisely.

1. Deals that sound too good to be true probably are, and should be viewed with suspicion.

2. Be a good shopper. Many products are peddled door to door and sold at prices that may be 10 to 20 times as high as what you can buy from your regular supplier or service person. You don't have to make on-the-spot decisions. Get the information you need to check things out. A reputable salesperson can usually be contacted later.

3. Deal with reputable people and businesses, who will be available to service what they sell. When you deal with local people who have to gain your respect because they see you and your neighbors week after week; they have to be accountable for their actions or they won't be in business.

4. Be suspicious when a stranger asks you to make payments in cash or to an individual rather than to a business. Can they be trusted?

5. Be suspicious of unknown businesses that have only a post office box for an address. What is their street address, and does the place actually exist?

6. Be wary of people who refuse to give you their name, address and phone number, and references you can check. If you have their address, you can contact local officials for more information.

7. Be careful who you give credit card numbers, checking account numbers and financial information.

8. Think twice about giving advance payments to strangers. Will they take your money and run? Pay for the product or service after it has been satisfactorily delivered. Do you need a solid guarantee?

9. Many reputable businesses do not require trusted customers to pay a security deposit to hold a product for you while you shop around, or while you take time to make up your mind. If you do pay a deposit will they pay it back if you change your mind, or will you be swayed to make a purchase you really did not want to make or should not make just so you don't lose your deposit? Be careful not to get trapped by these tactics. Reputable businesses do not exert undue pressure; they welcome your business tomorrow as well as today.

10. Never sign a blank contract or agreement. It's always good to be sure you read and understand what you sign.

11. Be wary of strangers who offer to inspect your home and property to determine repairs needed. They usually find something — and then offer to do them at great savings. Are the repairs actually needed? Are they competent people? What quality materials will they use and what guarantees are they willing to back and how do you get in touch with them later to request service or file complaints? Are these people burglars who need a good excuse to scout your premises, or to distract you while someone else is walking off with your possessions? As mentioned before, it's safer to deal with local, known, reputable people.

12. Also be wary of people who oversell untested, unregistered and unlabeled products, as a cure-all for just about everything, and are reluctant to show extensive and unbiased research data on their products. Some are reputable; others may not be. Rather than to show proof that their product is registered and effective for the uses they propose, they use selected testimonials or talk down other products. They may claim that university and governmental researchers are bought off by big companies, and are involved in a conspiracy to suppress them and other "little guys." Should you think these sales people are as credible as the people they are running down? Perhaps they are fearful that their product will not show up well under rigid and objective testing. Do you really want to risk the cost of using untested products?

13. Be sure your invoices are for things you actually purchased and have not yet paid for. Scout your invoices for errors. Also beware of solicitations and bogus bills that are made to look like real invoices, which con artists may use in hopes of tricking you into writing them a check.

The next article will continue with this discussion and conclude with a listing of agencies and organizations that can be contacted for more information and help.

DHIA Makes Adjustments

in our organization are the field technitions on the employee side and the farmers on the other side. These are the two areas in which we must work hardest. The county committee is the most important committee in the organization. I'm planning to try to attend each county board or committee meeting each year so that I maintain contact with the grass roots of our organization. We want to work with our field service."

The rapid change in the national DHIA scene has put Pennsylvania in the position of being a testing ground for the new approach that calls for the elimination of exclusive territories for providers of service. Dave said he believed good things were going to come out of the trials of the past few years in Pennsylvania DHIA. He believes their experience has prepared the state association to be efficient and ready for the competitive age.

"We are in the information business, which is an important part of farming," Dave said. "We can't afford to be police officers as we have been in the past. We can't afford the liability. But we need to provide a good service for those who want accurate information. We will not necessarily be the cheapest, but we will provide good service at a reasonable price."

Phil Dukas, national CEO, addressed the group on Friday and gave an overview of the changes to expect in the future that include: increased pressure on profitability; increased educational levels in the area of technology--farmers will not hesitate to pick up the computer to see what's available; openness to new ideas will be the result of better communication, and higher expectations will come from exposure to greater consumer service.

"The most important people in our organization are the field technicians on the employee side and the farmers on the other side."*--Dave Slusser, general manager, Pennsylvania DHIA

"To satisfy these needs, we must focus on doing whatever it takes to satisfy these needs," Dukas said. "We cannot convert everyone to our way of thinking, but we must give others what they need for their operations. These needs range from the intense cattle breeder/marketer to the commercial producer. Each group has different needs."

Dukas listed general trends as follows:

Service will be more customer oriented.

Pressure will continue to cut overhead.

Employees will be developed to fit new job descriptions.

Reduced farm profitability will put pressure on DHIA's cost/benefit relations.

Farm production technology will increase, and DHIA will need to help farmers use the technology at the management level.

Economic orientation will replace production orientation.

President Frank Orner reported on his vist to the national DHIA manager's meeting in California. He said the farms in the West are prepared to produce milk with whatever efficiency is needed to beat production in the East. Pennsylvania dairy farmers face stiff competition from these dairymen.

In Pennsylvania DHIA, Orner said we need to develop programs that suit whatever the members need. Some herds are going to get larger, and some are going to remain small with one person caring for the cows and a spouse working off the farm.

"Our efforts are put toward keeping the most money in the hands of farmers," Orner said. "In addition, the extension service is important to us, as they are our educational arm and they also are working with reduced personnel. We need to work with them whenever we can."

Orner credited Dave as the new general manager with building a team spirit and complementing the staff. "It's very important that everyone from the local level on up to managment speak positively about Pennsylvania DHIA," Orner said. "It's important we all work together to make Pennsylvania DHIA a strong organization.

Gordon Conklin, guest speaker at the opening of the general session, said agriculture is facing a monumental challenge from environmental concern, animal welfare, and government programs.

"We live in a society where 95 percent of the people are two or more generations removed from the farm," Conklin said. "We live in a world where people believe Elvis is alive and God is dead. People act not on what they know but on what they believe. Education is not enough. The challenge is to help people change their beliefs."

In a look at the 21st century, Conklin said the number of dairy herds in the nation would be reduced to 50 to 75,000 by the year 2,000, but total milk production will increase. High precision farming is the wave of the future with focused time frames for pesticide application and precise fertilizer application rates.

"Our efforts are put toward keeping the most money in the hands of farmers."*--Frank Orner, president, Pennsylvania DHIA

The average farm will take larger inputs of skills and management. Prices for farm products will be low in relation to hours worked to earn food. Manure disposal will be a major problem.

Farmers make up two percent of the population but own 40 percent of the land surface. This gives an enormous political potential of taking away land rights in the name of preserving agriculture.

"With new information systems you will be swimming in a river of information when you only want a glass of water," Conklin said. "Computer services to access all kinds of information will be a challenge to sort out what is relevent so you can disregard the rest.

I'm optimistic. Not all will be well. But over a lifetime, I have seen that dairymen have shown it is possible to live with courage and treat neighbors with compassion. I hope that's what you really seek," Conklin said.

At the awards banquet Friday night, Kent and Jodi Heffner, Schuylkill County, and Bob and Marcia Trotter, Lawrence County, were honored as DHIA'S Young Cooperative Couples.

The 1993 herd management awards were presented as follows: Ayrshire Breed: 1. Plumb Bottom Farm, Mifflin County, 91 points; 2. Ardrossan Farms, Chester County, 81 points, and 3. Delaware Valley College, Bucks County, 80 points.

The lowest SCC herd in the state was Highland H Farms, Jefferson County with 64,000 somatic cells/ml. rolling average 20.6 cows, DHI test.

The event marked the 25th year that Pennsylvania was incorporated and a library of memorabilia was assembled for the enjoyment of the attendees. A joint publication between Pennsylvania DHIA and Penn State University, authored by Donald L. Ace, professor emeritus, was available for purchase at the meeting. Entitled A History and Perspective of the Pennsylvania Dairy Herd Improvement Association Program, 1910 to 1991, the publication would still be available by contacting the dairy and animal science department at the university or the state office of DHIA.

How Does Your Herd Compare?

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — These data are calculated using information pulled from Pennsylvania DHIA's mainframe computer each week. It is a one-week summary representing approximately one-fourth of the herds on test, as they are tested monthly.

These data are valuable from a business management standpoint and can be used for comparing your operations to the averages from about one-fourth of the herds across the state.

MILK CHECK

THOMAS JURCHAK
Dairy Specialist
Lackawanna County

SCRANTON (Lackawanna Co.) — Just like the cold winter weather that's been with us the last five weeks, as of Feb. 14, nothing has changed in dairy product prices since last month.

Block cheese prices gained a half cent last Friday and barrels a quarter cent two weeks before, but that's it since Christmas.

Fortunately, cheese prices now are holding at levels that are over 14 cents higher than last February.

Last year that $1.16 in February was the low point of the year and they started up in March. Right now, starting up is just wishful thinking, but then nobody expected prices to hold this long into the new year.

Reasons for the continuing higher prices are not all weather related, but that's a good place to start.

Milk production nationally was down again 2 percent in January, for the sixth consecutive month.

Again the big cuts were in the upper Midwest and Northeast where weather was a problem for maintaining production and getting the milk off the farm. This affected the supply coming to processing plants at a time when demand was rising.

I believe handlers were stocking up to make sure they had enough for any panic buying by snowbound consumers. Or, maybe, kids drink more milk when they stay home from school.

Butter vs. Cheese

In any case, the weather was a factor along with the new Class IIIa started in all federal orders in December. That made butter-powder manufacturers competitive with the cheese makers.

Class IIIa milk in January was priced more than $2 less for butter and powder than the Class III milk for cheese.

So, even with 65-cent butter and $1.10 powder, at prices that haven't changed in five weeks, cheese makers had to scramble for their share of the shrinking manufacturing milk supply.

How long these prices last may very well depend on the weather or handlers' perception of when milk production will start increasing this spring.

It's already on the rise in the south and west and if the Midwest and Northeast even come up to normal levels we may still have a spring flush. However, as long as product prices stay up estimates of how low the Minnesota-Wisconsin Price Series will go keep looking better and better.

Lower But Better

Speaking of the M-W, you even came close to holding the price here but it did drop only 10 cents to $12.41 — the highest in January in four years and $1.52 better than last year.

In December, the price was $1.17 higher than last year and in February the difference will be even greater. A year ago the M-W fell 95 cents from November to January but it was only 34 cents less this year.

However, lower but better is not true of the farm price. That's higher and better in all Federal Orders in this area. You'll see increases of 10 to 15 cents for your January milk over December's price, and $1.15 to $1.40 over last January.

That doesn't include any over-orders premiums you may be getting from your handler, but these are becoming fewer and smaller, so check your milk check.

Pricewise, you're off to a good start for the new year, but keep your pencil sharp on feed costs and shop around for the best buys or you may just pass all the milk price increases on to your creditors.

Cedar Crest Equipment Holds Open House

A representative of Cedar Crest Equipment talks to a group of men who are part of a crowd of several hundred who attended the farm equipment dealer's open house at the Lebanon Area Fair Grounds. Some of the latest equipment in feed handling, and also in manure storage and handling was on display inside the large show barn at Lebanon.

Woodward Joins Dairylea

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Thad E. Woodward, of Canton, has been named general manager of the newly created Southern Division of Dairylea Cooperative Inc., announced Rick Smith, chief executive officer of Dairylea.

Woodward will be primarily responsible for membership activities and recruitment in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and several Southern Tier counties of New York.

"We are extremely pleased to have Thad Woodward join the Dairylea team," said Smith. "Thad brings an enormous amount of experience in working with the agricultural community, as well as the strong management skills needed for a growing agribusiness."

Prior to joining Dairylea, Woodward was employed with Eastern Milk Producers Cooperative Association Inc., for 23 years. Since 1979, Woodward served as vice president and general manager of Eastern Best Products, creating and establishing a profitable agri-products supply business through six regional stores and a rural delivery system.

"In the past year, Dairylea has strengthened its position in Pennsylvania with two new major milk sales," said Smith. "Our intent, with the addition of Thad, is to place a renewed emphasis on Dairylea's operations in Pennsylvania and serving our customers' and members' needs. Thad also will be representing Dairylea at appropriate industry matters and providing support in related areas such as milk marketing, hauling, laboratory services, insurance and livestock marketing."

Thad Woodward

Earlier in his career with Eastern, Woodward served as a quality control and field representative, inspecting dairy farms for regulatory compliance, while engaging in member recruitment.

In addition, Woodward owned and operated his own dairy, Hermit Hill Farm, from 1975 to 1992. The farm received the Dairy of Distinction Award in 1988 and was honored with production and quality awards from the Bradford County Dairy Herd Improvement Association.

Woodward is a charter member and past vice president of the Pennsylvania Milk Promotion Board and serves on the Guthrie Health-Care System Board of Directors. He is a past president of Troy Community Hospital and a past master of the Canton Masonic Lodge.

Woodward and his wife, Sheila, have three children, Tami, Tracy and Bob, and three grandchildren.

Dairylea, a Syracuse-based dairy cooperative with more than 2,200 farmer members throughout the Northeast, markets approximately 3.1 billion pounds of milk annually. Dairylea participates and is invested in a milk marketing network stretching from Maine to Maryland to Ohio.

Attend a Local Meeting and learn how to treat and prevent herd health problems with an all-natural product. MEETING TO BE CO-HOSTED BY JOHN H. BEILER, 12 A S. Ronks Rd., Ronks, Pa.

John has used our VITA-MIN-LAC products consistantly since 1990 and has received excellent results. After over three years of use, nobody understands the results that our products Vita-Min-Lac and Cow Care can give you any better than John. Please consider what John has to say and plan to attend the March 16th meeting.

I used Vita-Min-Lac on a horse that had eaten rumensin. I am convinced Vita-Min-Lac took the poison out of her system! That horse went through a real sweat, layed down for awhile but is now back in full health again. I used to use penicillin when my cows went off feed, but that contaminated the milk and meat. I now use Vita-Min-Lac because it knocks down a fever and fights infection just as good, plus it also stimulates my cows appetite and immune system.

For a serious illness, a strong anti-biotic may be needed but they work better with Vita-Min-Lac than penicillin because my cows show much better heat and conception. I have also had good luck with Vita-Min-Lac for dysentary and dehydration caused by weather changes, frozen silage and other factors.

Vita-Min-Lac has also reduced a high cell count problem that I used to have before using Vita-Min-Lac and I always use it for my freshening cows to stop udder edema and cleaning problems. American Forage And Grassland Council To Hold Conference

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — The American Forage and Grassland Council (AFGC) will celebrate its 50th anniversary at a working conference to be held March 6-9 here at the Lancaster Host Resort.

The agenda for the AFGC Conference includes a trade show; premium hay judging; a showcase of Pennsylvania agricultural products; invited speakers; a young scientist program, including scientific papers and posters on forage and grassland projects; a professional tour of Lancaster County; and a special tour for spouses. Dean Kleckner, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, is the featured speaker for the conference.

The AFGC promotes the profitable use of forage as a prime resource in the efficient production of feed, food, and fiber. It provides a forum for all interested parties in the private and public sector to get together in the exchange of information on the optimum production and utilization of forages. It also collects, analyzes, and disseminates technical and economic information relating to forages.

Dean Kleckner Featured Speaker

Dean Kleckner, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, is slated as the featured speaker at the upcoming American Forage and Grassland Council Conference.

Kleckner serves on the U.S. Trade Advisory Committee. He was first appointed to that group by President Reagan and twice reappointed by President Bush. Kleckner was a member and the only farmer on the U.S. Advisory team to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) when the Uruguay Round of trade negotiations was launched in 1986.

In 1988-1989, he served on the National Economic Commission. That commission was formed to advise the president and Congress on ways to reduce the federal budget deficit while promoting economic growth. Kleckner also served on the board of directors of the National Livestock Producers Association and the U.S. Meat Export Federation.

He has been president of the American Farm Bureau Federation since 1986 and is serving his fourth term in office. He has been active in rural health issues serving on a commission on health care costs, and on the boards of Blue Cross and the Iowa Health Policy Corporation.

Kleckner and his wife, Natalie, operate a 350-acre corn, soybean, and hog farm in Rudd, Iowa. He annually markets about 1,800 hogs.

Trade and Hay Show

Approximately 50 AFGC members will have booths and special exhibits at the indoor trade show. Exhibits will feature a variety of products, from the latest in seed varieties to recent advances in hay and forage harvesting mechanization.

Ford New Holland will have a special exhibit highlighting 50 years of growth in hay and forage mechanization. That exhibit will include the first automatic twine-tie, pickup baler — the New Holland Model 76, in addition to one of the company's newest balers.

A portion of the trade and exhibit area will be devoted to the display of quality hay samples submitted by entrants from all over the United States. Forage project posters, prepared by young scientists, will also be displayed in the exhibit area.

The Pennsylvania Night Dinner, showcasing Pennsylvania food specialties, will be held in the exhibit area. The dinner will be hosted by the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Association, the Pennsylvania Apple Growers, the Pennsylvania Sheep and Wool Growers, and the Pennsylvania Dairy Industry. The complimentary dinner will also give all attendees a chance to sample traditional Lancaster County Pennsylvania Dutch fare.

Professional Tour

The AFGC Professional Tour will focus on forages and their role in nutrient management. Visitors to Amish and "English" farms will see and hear how Pennsylvania's nutrient management legislation is affecting farming practices.

The tour includes a visit to one of Ford New Holland's Pennsylvania manufacturing plants. Located in the town of New Holland, the plant is responsible for all round and square baler production, in addition to the manufacture of a number of other products.

Time will be spent with company engineers to discuss how industry is responding to nutrient management concerns. Then tour participants will visit a local agriculture analysis laboratory and see how it has modified its services to meet the nutrient management needs of farmers.

The Spouse Tour

AFGC describes its Spouse Tour as three days of fun and informative activities arranged to make the conference a family affair.

Activities include visits to the Nissley Vineyards and Winery Estate, the Pfaltzgraff pottery factory and outlet, and the historic Lancaster Farmers Market and Heritage Center.

Spouses will also get a chance to "twist their own pretzels" as they visit the Julius Sturgis Pretzel House in Lititz — America's first pretzel bakery. Then they'll tour the Ephrata Cloister, an 18th century religious communal society.

Tour participants will be able to sample local cooking at restaurants such as the Kitchen Kettle in Intercourse. Then, they'll have time to walk through the many shops in the area.

For more information contact the American Forage and Grassland Council, P.O. Box 94, Georgetown, Texas 78627, or call AFGC headquarters at (800) 944-AFGC.

Shorthorn Breeders Hold Meeting

PROSPECT (Butler Co.) — The Pennsylvania Shorthorn Cattle Breeders Association held its annual dinner meeting at the Garden Gate Restaurant recently. Speaker was Donald Hunter, livestock extension agent, Butler-Lawrence counties. Hunter had a slide presentation taken in Oregon when he was associated with Portland Community College.

Directors elected for three-year terms included Cindy Schneider, Butler; Bradley Eisiminger, Waynesburg; Richard Peoples, Volant; and Harold Kennedy, Valencia. Officers elected to serve in 1994 are Bradley Eisiminger, president; George Six, vice president; Mary Lou Peoples, treasurer; and George Hunter, secretary.

Members voted to hold the 1994 state show at the Washington County Fairgrounds on July 23. Don Cowden, Hickory, and David McElhaney will coordinate this event.

The annual spring sale will be held at the Mercer 4-H Park on May 7.

Here are the facts why ULTRAFLO® outperforms chain feeders
FEED SAVINGS. Customers report 1/2 to 2 lbs. per 100 birds/day—over $10,000 per year saved on a 100,000-bird house. Year after year!
TROUGH DESIGN. High tensile steel for strength. No feed buildup or waste like chain trough
NO RE-GRADING of feed, due to our design. Chain lets birds pick over feed while feeder runs
REMIXES FEED. Our auger slowly revolves, keeping old and new feed blended. Chain doesn't, so feed can get stale.
REPAIR & MAINTENANCE. Ours needs the least of all feeders. Easy splicing with auger connector, and no troublesome corners or chain guides to replace. Saves money and time year after year

SIMPLE OPERATION. "Push-Pull" Power Units with low HP motor are located along the feeder line as needed.

EASY AUGER CONNECTOR. Allows fast and simple installation, also quick and easy repair of auger if ever necessary.

Remodel with Chore-Time and you can have more birds, better performance and less maintenance. Chore-Time's 4 tier, 20 inch deep Duratrims are the same width as 3 tier dropping board systems and 4 tier reverse cages. Go from 60,000 birds to 80,000 birds.

Over 80% of the nation's top egg producers* have already switched to Chore-Time cages with ULTRAFLO® Feeders!*

Holstein Programs Outlined At Barn Meeting

EVERETT NEWSWANGER
Managing Editor

PARADISE (Lancaster Co.)—At a barn meeting on the farm of Robert and Gary Bowman, an outline of the new linear classification program from the National Holstein Association and other herd book and registration information were topics of discussion. Don Cook, classifier, and Clarence Stauffer, field services, conducted the meeting sponsored by the Lancaster County Holstein Association.

In the linear classification program, a classifier from the national association evaluates each cow for 17 functional traits. Each trait is given a value, and you can review a cow's ratings and identify her strengths and weaknesses. Because bulls are now evaluated by similar means, through classification of their daughters, a service sire can be selected to mate for improvement of offspring.

Cook explained the various important traits for which dairymen should watch. For example, a cow with too much set to her hock joints, a sickle-hocked cow, would have trouble moving around. Or a cow with an udder that didn't have good fore and rear attachments may not be suitable for extended production.

The linear classification results are used as a benchmark to track progress from generation to generation. You have more control of the direction of your breeding program by using this unbiased means to measure progress.

In addition to the new scoring breakdowns, the association has several participation programs that allow dairy farmers to classify only the cows they want to use in their breeding program.

For example, you may want to use the "classic" program that classifies all the cows in the herd that have ever freshened with 36 months. Or you can select the option to classify "breeder's choice" with only special cows to be classified. Between these possibilities are four other programs that give dairymen a break on classification costs but meet the needs of the breeding programs in many different herds.

Stauffer told the group that you can permanently identify your animals over the phone by calling the toll-free number and giving the genetic information to the home office. They will take the information and print it on the application that is sent to you for sketches or photos. If you don't want to bother with sketches or photos, the association allows you to use permanent-type ear tags.

The Qualified Holstein Herdbook also offers those with cows that have not been registered to become part of an identified program. Grade cows with proper identification of genetic background can now become part of this separate herd registry book. In an attempt to get many of the good grade cows into a registry program, a low application fee is in place until the end of this year. Anyone interested in any of these programs can call the National Holstein Association at 1-800-952-5200 or contact a local county association officer or board member.

The functional parts of a cow used to describe linear traits are shown on a model of the true-type Holstein.

Dean Hood Named Chairman Of Ag Satellite Consortium

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Dr. Lamartine F. Hood, dean of Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences, has been elected chairman of the Agricultural Satellite Corporation (AG*SAT), a consortium of nearly 50 land-grant universities and government agencies.

AG*SAT was formed in 1989 for the production and distribution of distance education programming, including undergraduate credit courses and cooperative extension programs. Penn State is a charter member, and Hood has been a member of the consortium's board of directors since its inception. He previously served as secretary and vice-chairman of the board.

"My role will be to provide leadership to ensure that AG*SAT attains its full potential as a provider of distance education programs," Hood said.

Hood belives the biggest challenge facing AG*SAT is developing quality programming on a regular basis. "We have to take a market approach in creating programs that meet the needs of our partners and diverse audiences," he said.

"We need to form alliances with other organizations, such as user groups and private industry. And we need to utilize a whole range of emerging technolgoies to reach those who can use the information, whether they are location-bound students, cooperative extension clients or those in commercial sectors."

Penn State has been heavily involved in the production and distribution of AG*SAT programming. One of the first two courses offered via AG*SAT, Introductory Food Science, originated from Penn State in the spring of 1991. The course was downlinked and offered for credit at six college campuses nationwide, and also was used for professional training by extension and food industry personnel in two states.

"AG*SAT allows member universities to use each other's courses to fill voids in their curricula," Hood said. "But as our Introductory Food Science course demonstrated, course materials can be used for multiple purposes, maximizing our efforts."

Since 1989, the College of Agricultural Sciences also has originated nearly 50 cooperative extension videoconferences that have been distributed by AG*SAT and offered at dozens of locations around Pennsylvania and beyond. These programs typically include videotaped portions and interactive sgements when audience members can talk directly with specialists in the studio via telephone.

In conjunction with AG*SAT, Penn State is installing satellite dishes at cooperative extension offices across the state. So far, 15 downlink sites have been completed and 16 more are in the planning or construction phases.

Funding for much of the AG*SAT network, which is headquartered at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, has been provided by telecommunication facilities grants from the U.S. Department of Commerce. Matching funds or in-kind services have been provided by member institutions and county governments.

"The growth of AG*SAT is a relfection of the commitment colleges of agriculture have to all citizens," said Hood. "The creative use of these distance education technologies will help us fulfill our land-grant mission into the 21st century."

New Regulations Improve Labeling For Liming Materials

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Agriculture Secretary Boyd E. Wolff has announced the creation of new regulations dealing with agricultural liming materials. The regulations require manufacturers to provide more information about the materials.

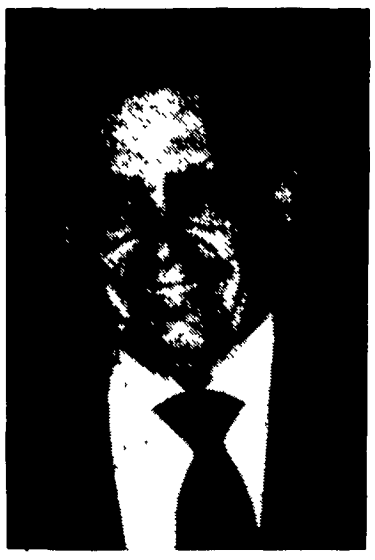
"These regulations will benefit both the producers of liming materials and consumers," Wolff said. "Additional products will be made available for agricultural use, and consumers will be assured of getting the type of materials that they need."

Under the new regulations, liming materials sold in Pennsylvania must include labels stating the name and principal office address of the manufacturer or distributor, the brand or trade name of the material, the type and classification of liming material, minimal calcium carbonate equivalent (CCE), minimum effective neutralizing value (ENV), maximum moisture, percentage of total calcium and magnesium, and percentage passing through U.S. Standard mesh sieves.

The new regulations have been developed in response to requests from agribusinesses who sought uniformity in labeling liming materials for use in different stages. Representatives of industry, government, and land grant colleges from Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia held a series of meetings to develop uniform labeling requirements for agricultural liming materials which would be applicable in all of those states. Pennsylvania, a leader in the production and sale of agricultural liming materials, is ahead of the other participating states in efforts to implement the proposed standards.

Editor Wins Journalism Award

Everett Newswanger, managing editor, Lancaster Farming, was awarded the 1994 Northeast Farm Communicator Association Award for excellence for the best photojournalism farm story at the association's winter meeting in Manchester, New Hampshire, earlier this month. The Communicator Association is a group of professional agricultural journalists, broadcasters, and public relations persons from the Northeast part of the U.S.



Everett Newswanger

The winning story featured the bulk milk tank truck driver who left his small son waiting at home for his daddy to return from days of non-stop efforts to get the milk from farm to plant in the blizzard snows of 1993.

Newswanger is the 1993 Honorary County Agent named by the Pennsylvania Agricultural County Agents Association at their annual meeting in State College in November. More recently the Pennsylvania Young Farmers Association named Newswanger Honorary State Young Farmer at their annual meeting in Lancaster.

Newswanger and Ellen, his wife of 37 years, have two married children and four granddaughters ages five and under.

Farm Bureau To Meet

prior-converted croplands and the permit exemption for normal farming practices should also be spelled out in law.

• The last time the federal government operated on a balanced budget was 25 years ago. Farm Bureau supports passage of a balanced budget constitutional amendment to bring discipline to runaway federal spending. The amendment would require that federal outlays be in balance with federal revenues unless three-fifths of the entire membership of the House and Senate vote for higher spending.

In addition to visiting their congressmen, farmers attending PA Farm Bureau's Washington Tour will hear addresses from Congressman Rick Santorum (R-18th Dist.) and PFB president Keith Eckel. The farmers will be updated on the activities of the U.S. House Agriculture Committee by Rep. Tim Holden (D-6th Dist.), Pennsylvania's only congressman on the committee.

The Pennsylvania Farm Bureau is a voluntary, general farm organization which represents 23,542 farm families in 54 county units. It is affiliated with the nation's largest general farm organization, the 4.2-million member American Farm Bureau Federation.

Farm Women Society Members Reflect On Growing Up And Life Today

Family Life — Then And Now

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

KIRKWOOD (Lancaster Co.) — Stories are often heard about the "good old days" when parents and children worked side by side on the farm, and many of the social ills of society seem to slide by without affecting the lives of most families.

Several members of Lancaster Farm Women Society 15 have lived in "the good, old days." Some are now retired, their sons and daughters grown, and their grandchildren and great grandchildren are now experiencing family life in the '90s.

Since 1994 has been designated "The Year of the Family," there is a renewed interest in family. How do the good old days compare to life today?

Recently Nancy Shoemaker, Isabel Ferree, Elma Maule, and Trudy Bard took time to reflect on family life as they saw it while growing up and how they see it today.

Although family life is known to have undergone many changes in recent years, it is apparent that even in the good old days, family life could not be stereotyped. Families learned to live with the good and the bad. They survived — often happily — despite hardships.

Nancy Shoemaker

While some people blame today's ills on broken homes, Nancy Shoemaker doesn't believe that is the total problem.

She grew up as a child of divorced parents in the 1930s. "And, believe me, that was almost unheard of then," she said.

Although Nancy got almost everything she wanted in possessions, she said, "I missed that feeling of family."

Her grandfather helped fill that void and, Nancy said, she had a nice childhood, was active in church and school, and had lots of friends.

Unlike today's teens, Nancy said that it was quite an event when a boy got to borrow the family car. "There were only two boys who had a car when I was in high school," she said. "And, believe me, they (the boys) were very much in demand."

After college, Nancy taught school, met her husband to be, quit her job, and came to the farm.

"Everybody said it wouldn't work," Nancy said of her transition of going from town to the farm.

"It was rough adapting, but I survived," she said of the isolation she felt in not having even a phone for the first four years of married life.

"What really helped me was the advice my mother-in-law told me. I never forgot it, and I bless her everyday for it," Nancy said.

The advice?

Never go near the cows.

"I didn't," Nancy said. "But I saw other women start helping in the barn and they soon ended up working there everyday."

However, Nancy did learn to can and freeze and "do all those things a good wife should," she said.

The couple had four boys, who are now grown. Now that there are seven grandchildren in the family, she observes the different lifestyles.

"Fathers today spent a lot more time with the children than my husband was able to spend with ours," she said. "My boys sometimes forego business to do something for the kids. Things pretty much center on the kids. I think it's great that fathers take more interest in the children and are able to do so."

Nancy thinks mothers today are more interested in careers because fathers help out more in the home.

"There's more responsibility put on the children when mothers work outside the home, but children seem to be happy and that's the main thing," she said.

Nancy and her husband Kenneth still live on their 300-acre farm, but two of their sons now operate it and milk 80 cows.

All four of the Shoemakers' sons live within a ¼ mile radius. "So the children know there is always someone around — they have a good support system," she said.

Isabel Ferree

Isabel Ferree grew up as an only child. She never married, but she has plenty of experience with children. Isabel taught school for 43 years and then worked part time as a teacher's aide until five years ago.

"Children today are more mature than when I first taught in a one-room school," Isabel said.

"That has its good sides and bad sides. It's good to be mature but sometimes they get thrown into things that they aren't mature enough to handle such as teen pregnancy."

"There were only two boys who had a car when I was in high school," she said. "And, believe me, they (the boys) were very much in demand."

Isabel said that she believes there is a big difference in the peer pressure children feel today compared with when she was in school.

"When I was a child, everything centered on school, church and family life at home. Now both parents work. There are so many things — good things to be active in — but it results in a different family life. One family member is going this way and another that."

Isabel said that she was fortunate that her dad was very much a family man. On the whole, she believes fathers today help more with housework and children.

"But it was definitely better to be a child in my era," she said.

"When I was growing up, we walked to school. We'd take our sleds to school and sled for one hour during lunchtime and during two 15-minute recesses during the day."

As a teacher, Isabel felt sorry for students who did not have free time at school after third grade.

Since elementary children have so little unstructured free time, it puts too much pressure on them. On the other hand, she believes high school students need structured activities instead of being allowed to hang out on street corners.

Parents, she said, are sometimes unaware of what children are doing, the lyrics to the music that they are listening to.

"My dad thought that it was really important to get in the right thing. He considered smoking immoral. If he knew of anyone whose family did not have good name, I was expected to be nice to them, but not allowed to associate with them," she said.

Curfews were unheard of, she said, because they were not necessary. It was just understood that children got in at a decent time.

Isabel still lives on the Century Farm on which she was born and raised. It's been in the family since 1880. Her cousin's son farms it.

Curfews were unheard of, she said, because they were not necessary. It was just understood that children got in at a decent time.

Trudy Bard

Trudy Bard isn't retired. She doesn't have grandchildren, but her two sons are grown and Trudy laments the fact that they missed an important part of childhood that meant so much to her — living near grandparents.

"Extended family life has really changed," said Trudy, who grew up in Bucks County and lived near her grandparents. When her brother was killed by a school bus, it was Trudy's grandmother who held the family together as they struggled through the emotional horrors.

When Trudy married William from Chester County and the couple moved to Kirkwood, Trudy was disappointed that extended family members did not live nearby.

"I feel that my kids have really suffered by not living near to grandparents," she said.

Trudy feels that she was fortunate to be able to quit her school teaching job to become a full-time mother.

"Today, necessity to survive often required two incomes," she said. "I can't put myself in that situation. I think that change is hard on the kids."

"I feel that my kids have really suffered by not living near to grandparents," she said.

While two-income families often require the father to help more with the children's upbringing than perhaps their own fathers had helped, Trudy's husband William is an example of men who have always taken an active part in parenting.

"My husband was better with the babies than I was." Trudy said.

Elma Maule

Elma Maule remembers a good childhood, despite the death of a sibling. She lived on a farm until she was 12, then the family moved to Oxford.

Elma graduated from Temple University with a degree in education. She taught five years in elementary school, until she married in 1933. She and her husband adopted three children and then had a birth child who died at two years of age. The Maules now have 12 grandchildren and several great grandchildren.

"They seem to live happy lives," Elma said. "The biggest change I see is that they get jobs at a younger age."

Homestead Notes

Consuming Thoughts

Penn State Home Economist

Many of us were probably brought up with the potato as the centerpiece of our daily diet. Then, in recent years, some people got the idea tht the spud was responsible for the extra bulges and therefore not worth a second glance in the supermarket.

Far too many of us have an unreasonable fear of a perfectly harmless vegetable — the potato. We pass up 100 calories worth of potato for a second helping of steak. A smart consumer learns to enjoy America's favorite vegetable year-round and serves it in versatile dishes at breakfast, lunch, dinner, and snacks.

The potato, of course is a good deal more than starch. Besides being an appetite appeaser, the potato is a low-fat, high-nutrition vegetable that contributes only 80 calories to your dinner plate, and 30 percent of your vitamin C requirement, a good deal less than most of the foods that might take its place. (Another lamb chop or second helping of roast beef could cost you 300 calories or more. Even your salad dressing is probably higher in calories than the potato.)

If potatoes are so harmless, why the pound-provoking image? One reason, of course, is that potatoes are seldom seen except in the company of high calorie-high fat companions — butter, sour cream, rich sauces, and gravies, shredded cheese, or crumbled bacon. Like a lot of other perfectly good foods, potatoes are the victim of guilt by association.

So, how do you keep a potato virtuous? Become a creative low-calorie cook and strip away the unneeded extra calories in the most popular potato dishes. There are lots of good companions you can provide for everybody's favorite vegetable, sinfully rich-tasting toppings and sauces that only seem fattening.

Here are just a few examples of low-calorie potato companions:

• Mock sour cream — non-dairy flakes, averaging 25 calories a tablespoon. Choose low-fat sour dressings, with only a few calories a tablespoon. Heart-smart dieters, take note: Most "vegetable oil" sour cream substitutes are made with highly saturated coconut oil and should be avoided by the cholesterol-wary.

• Plain yogurt — only eight calories a tablespoon, with a taste and texture similar to sour cream. Try it mixed with parsley or chives.

• Low-fat cottage cheese — about 15 calories a tablespoon. Tangy style small curd cottage cheese has a flavor similar to sour cream. "Whipped" cottage cheese is also available.

• Homemade "sour cream" — prepared by whipping equal parts cottage cheese and buttermilk in your blender. About 10 calories a tablespoon.

• Diet margarine — 50 calories a tablespoon instead of 100 for ordinary margarine or butter. (Note that regular margarine and butter have the same caloric count.) One teaspoon (16 calories) is enough.

• Diet salad dressing — pick blue cheese, cream Caesar, French, or any flavor you favor. Most are 10 to 24 calories a tablespoon.

• Imitation bacon bits — smokey-flavored soy protein chips at only 7 or 8 calories a teaspoon, a fraction of the calories or real bacon.

• Low-calorie cream sauce — made by stirring 1 cup skim milk gradually into 2 tablespoons flour. Cook over low heat until thickened. Season it with onion flakes, butter-flavored salt, and pinch of cayenne. Nine calories a tablespoon.

• Low-calorie gravy — made with fat-free pan juices left from a roast. Chill the drippings until all the fat congeals on the surface. Strip off the fat (and calories) and simmer each cupful with 2 tablespoons flour. Less than 10 calories a tablespoon. Canned beef or chicken broth can be thickened the same way.

Teen Earns Cattlemen's Award

LINDA WILLIAMS
Bedford Co. Correspondent

BEDFORD (Bedford Co.) — LaDonna Miller of Bedford RD 2, took home the annual Youth Award presented by the Bedford Cattlemen's Association at their annual banquet held at Ed's Steak House.

A freshman at Bedford High School, LaDonna is the daughter of Dave and Linda Miller. She helps with all of the work revolving around the family's 100 head of Limousin on their slightly more than 100-acre farm.

Six of the Limousin are claimed by LaDonna who has won numerous trophies and ribbons to testify to her success as a young farmer.

Last year, LaDonna showed the grand champion steer at the Bedford Fair and had the third overall champion steer for two years previous to that. She also had the champion home bred steer and a champion junior fitting trophy.

At the Pennsylvania State Farm Show, LaDonna took home two seconds and a first and she was second in her class in Keystone competition in October. She also showed the champion bred and owned animal.

Guest speaker for the evening was Glenn Eberly, director of animal meat evaluation at the Penn State University.

Eberly congratulated the Bedford cattlemen on their continued successes and commented that it was the most well attended banquet he had been to this winter.

He said an excellent group of bulls will represent the cattle farmers of Bedford County at the upcoming Bull Sale at Penn State in March.

Having recently attended the National Cattlemen's Banquet in Reno, Eberly was enthusiastic over the future of beef in America.

"We were made to realize that we must start becoming a more consumer driven organization," Eberly said. "We have strong competition from the pork and poultry industries and we should take a lesson.

"The consumer wants quality and consistency but they also want something that is quick and easy. Quality is a piece of red meat that people enjoy eating."

Eberly admitted that negative shows such as "60 Minutes," have had a negative impact on the beef industry.

"The E Coli Jack-in-the-Box incident was also negative," he continued. "Unfortunately, through all that bad publicity, it never came out that the problem could have been caused by dirty ice and that the beef was most probably imported."

"NCA now has 37,000 members and you should be proud to be a part of it," Eberly concluded. "I am very optimistic about the future of beef in this country."

Sam Wiley, a Bedford County beef farmer, was presented with a special recognition award for all of the work he has contributed to the organization.

Door prizes were awarded following the meeting.

TAKING TIME

by Rebecca Escott
Extension Home Economist

Again!

Recently, I've been spending time with several toddlers and preschoolers. What a treat! I think one of their favorite words is "Again!" I sang "Miss Polly had a Dolly" with a two-year-old at least five times in my living room and then at least five more times on the way to the pizza shop before the adults managed to distract this enthusiastic child. If I caught her eye during the evening, she'd ask, "Miss Polly?" And the negotiation process would begin again.

I've also been cornered by a preschooler to read to her. The last sitting entailed the reading of four to six books. I finally had to limit it, saying "I'll only do two more... One more. This is the last one... Okay that's the last one." What is it about children that makes them want repetition? Invariably if you offer to read a story, they select the same one time after time. This often happens with videos or songs or games, too. Repetition. It can be maddening for an adult. But maybe if we have a perspective on it, it can be tolerable.

Children ages 18-months to three-years-old are developing their memory skills by asking adults to repeat rhymes, songs, and stories. They are also strengthening observation skills. Children ask adults to make funny faces or sounds again and again. Each time the performance brings a peal of laughter or an attempt to imitate. These, too, are important intellectual and motor skills development activities. And family rituals — of singing the same song or reading the same story — builds a sense of routine and predictability into a young child's life. Children feel more secure when life progresses in a way they expect.

So how does a parent keep sane with the sometimes aggravating requests for the same old thing? First remind yourself that your child IS learning through the exercise. Second, focus on the joy that the repetition brings. Encourage the child to join in, sing along or even take the lead in a familiar activity. Try to be open to a few rounds of the song or game. Then state your limits and give some warning. "I know you're having fun, but Daddy is only going to sing the song two more times..." You might try to suggest a planned respite. "That's all for now, but we can sing again after dinner" or "This is the last time for tonight, but let's do it again tomorrow on the way to preschool."

Some children, depending on their maturity, can be coaxed into "singing" or "reading" with a doll, stuffed animal or household pet. These "family members" have more patience than most adults and can provide welcome relief in some cases.

Jean Illsley Clarke, a family therapist and parent educator, believes that one of the important messages we can give preschoolers is that they can "do things as many times as they need to." This message supports positive self-esteem as the child grows and tries new things. Clarke encourages people to speak this verbal message with their sons and daughters — "You can do things as many times as you need to." Adults can also communicate that message non-verbally by agreeing to do a basic activity multiple times.

By taking the time to do things again and again with young children you are supporting very important growth steps for them and bringing enjoyment at the same time. Take a deep breath, count to ten, and say, "Okay, one more time."

Helping Children Make Healthy Food Choices

Joyce Bupp
York Co. Correspondent

BALTIMORE (Maryland) — What's your favorite snack food?

Potato chips go to the top of the snack food list for the largest percentage of American adults; cookies and similar sweets rank second, while fruits and other nutritional choices come in a much lower third, according to one recent food survey.

And that, says a National Dairy Council vice-president, is why the nutrition organization is mounting a major effort aimed at teaching better food habits to kids of elementary school age.

Trevor Steinbach, Ph.D., the Dairy Council's head of nutrition education, shared new nutrition teaching methods with nearly 100 Baltimore-area health and dietary professionals attending the Upper Chesapeake Bay, Dairy Food and Nutrition Council of the Southeast's (DFNCS) annual meeting, held February 8 at the Airport Marriott hotel.

"Children are making their own nutritional choices," emphasized Dr. Steinbach, relating the social changes that have left millions of the nation's children in charge of getting their own, and often siblings', meals. He reported that kids are buying $6.8 billion in snack foods annually, as well as influencing some $82 billion (worth) of food choices for family consumption.

A new Dairy Council "Snack Stars" series of nutrition materials focuses on the five food groups and is a tool for educators to teach good snacking habits. New nutrition education materials are also designed for use far beyond the traditional heath class.

Jesse Burall, left, Maryland dairy producer and president of the board of the Upper Chesapeake Bay Dairy Council, welcomed National Dairy Council vice-president Trevor Steinbach to the Baltimore-area group's annual meeting.

"Nutritional materials must be made available for use in art, music, social studies, math. and language classes," emphasized the Dairy Council vice-president. Newly-developed lessons include exercises designed for use by cluster groups of children, who learn by teaching and helping each other, and materials aimed at the growing numbers of diverse cultural and ethnic groups in the nation.

"Schools are becoming childrens' social service agency," Dr. Steinbach noted, citing the steady growth of the school breakfast program. "School meals make a significant contribution to their daily dietary intake."

Some 5.3 million children now eat breakfast at school, compared with 23.7 million participating in the traditional school lunch program served by 90 percent of the nation's schools.

Projecting ahead, Dr. Steinbach predicted that medical strides in genetic research will replace across-the-board health recommendations with individual diet and exercise programs, based on each person's own genetic strengths and weaknesses.

"Look for Dairy Council to take a lead in helping to develop individual diet materials in the future," he predicted.

Great Potatoes No Matter How You Spell It

When the need for a quick meal arises, trendy accompaniments for the common potato are a welcome scenario.

As a bonus, the toppers are extraordinarily easy to prepare. Minimal measuring with only scant chopping or shredding yields extraordinary results. Make the toppers in advance, if you like. They keep in the refrigerator for up to five days and make enough for several individual servings. Or, the toppings can be prepared in the time that it takes to cook the potato in a microwave.

BASIC MICROWAVE POTATO

Scrub potato. Pierce in several places with tines of fork. Place on paper towel in microwave oven on high for 2 minutes. Turn over potato; microwave 2 to 3 minutes more or until tender. Let stand, covered with a dish 5 minutes. Serve topped with one of the following toppings.

Bacon Buttermilk Topping:

½ cup raw broccoli flowerettes
½ cup dairy sour cream
⅓ cup buttermilk
3 tablespoons chopped red pepper
2 tablespoons chopped green onion
2 slices bacon, cooked, drained, crumbled
¼ teaspoon pepper

Tomato Blue Cheese Topper:

1 cup cottage cheese
½ cup lowfat plain yogurt
½ cup chili sauce
½ cup crumbled Blue cheese
⅓ cup chopped sun dried tomatoes
3 tablespoons minced green pepper
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
¼ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon garlic powder

Beat cottage cheese in small mixer bowl until smooth. If using dry packed sun dried tomatoes, soak in boiling water 5 minutes; drain, then chop. Stir in remaining ingredients until well combined. Spoon onto hot baked potato.

Mexican Cheese Topping:

⅔ cup garbanzo beans, rinsed and drained
½ cup dairy sour cream
½ cup prepared mild or hot salsa
½ cup shredded cheddar cheese
¼ teaspoon garlic powder

POTATO SOUP

6 strips bacon, browned
2 tablespoons bacon drippings
½ celery
1 onion, chopped
4 potatoes
4 cups chicken broth
½ cup broccoli
½ cup cauliflower
¼ cup flour
1 teaspoon salt
1¼ cup milk
¼ cup cream

Brown bacon and remove all but 2 tablespoons bacon drippings from skillet. Saute celery, onion, and potatoes in skillet. Add chicken broth and stir in broccoli and cauliflower. Simmer until tender. Stir in flour and salt and cook until thickened. While stirring, stir in milk and cream and simmer until hot.

COMPANY MASHED POTATOES

9 large potatoes, cooked
2 to 3 ounces cream cheese
1 cup sour cream
2 teaspoons onion salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons butter

Cook potatoes and beat. Add cream cheese, sour cream, onion salt, pepper, and butter. Pour into casserole dish. Dot with butter and paprika. Bake at 325 degrees for 35 minutes.

POTATO FILLING

Cook 5 pounds potatoes. Mash with ¼ cup cream, ¼ cup butter, ½ teaspoon salt, and ¼ teaspoon pepper. Add sauteed garlic, 3 onions, ½ pound mushrooms, and pinch of sage and parsley.

Add 3 beaten eggs to mashed potatoes. Add sauteed vegetables and soy sauce. Mix well and bake at 350 degrees until browned.

Anne Keller

For a quick meal, turn to microwaved potato with a topping that may be prepared in advance or while the potato cooks.

TWICE BAKED POTATOES

4 baking potatoes
3 green onions, thinly sliced
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup milk or half and half
½ teaspoon salt
Dash black pepper
Dash nutmeg
Dash paprika
4 slices crisp bacon
2 tablespoons grated parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons grated sharp cheese

Wash potatoes, pat dry. Prick each potato on a rack at 400 degrees for about 1 hour or until done.

Cut a thin slice from top of each potato. Scoop out the pulp and place in a bowl.

Mash potato pulp with hot milk and beat until fluffy. Add butter and onions. Add seasonings. Fry bacon until crisp. Crumble. Add to potato mixture. Spoon potato mixture into shells. Sprinkle with both cheeses. Place potatoes on baking sheet. Bake at 375 degrees for about 15 minutes or until potatoes are piping hot and cheese melts. Serve immediately.

ANSWER — Chris Ferri, Stewartsville, N.J., wanted a recipe for vanilla fudge. Thanks to Sarah Clark, Breezewood, for sending a recipe.

White Fudge

3 cups sugar
⅔ cup milk
1 tablespoon Karo syrup

Combine sugar, milk, and syrup in saucepan and cook until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Do not stir while cooking; add:

1 tablespoon butter
1 teaspoon vanilla
12 ounces peanut butter
7 ounces marshmallow creme

Mix well and pour into buttered pan.

ANSWER — Brenda Breisch wanted to know how to can pimiento. Thanks to Martin Roy, Warrenton, Va., who dug out a recipe for her and to Sarah Clark, Breezewood, who thought she might want to freeze pimiento.

Pimientos

Select ripe, unblemished pimientos. Place peppers into hot cooking oil for 2 to 3 minutes or into boiling water for 12 to 15 minutes or in 450 degree oven for 6 to 8 minutes. Remove skins, stems, and seeds. Flatten peppers and pack hot in clean, hot containers. Add 1 teaspoon salt to each quart. No additional liquid is needed. Adjust lids. Process in pressured canner at 10 pound. Pints for 10 minutes and quarts for 15 mintues.

Pimiento — Freezing

Pimiento peppers may be peeled by roasting them in a 400 degree oven for 3 to 4 minutes or until peels are charred. Cool, peel pimiento, and pack dry in freezer containers.

ANSWER — Brenda Breisch, Bloomsburg, wanted interesting ideas for fish other than the standard frying in breadcrumbs? Thanks to Gloria Sweigart, Manheim; Sarah Clark, Breezewood; and Peg Koser, Lancaster, for sending recipes.

Fish

In flat dish mix ½ cup mayonnaise and enough milk for thinning to dip fish pieces. In another dish, mix ⅔ part and ⅓ part cornmeal, salt, and pepper to taste. Dip in mayonnaise mixture then in flour mixture. Fry in hot skillet, turning once. Good for shark, flounder, blue fish, etc.

Steam: Follow recipe on Old Bay Seasoning to steam shrimp. Bring to a boil and place fish pieces in mixture to poach.

Broil: Melt 3 tablespoons butter, add lemon juice to taste. Brush on fish, place in broiler until done. Brush on more butter mixture and sprinkle with paprika.

Grill: On gas or charcoal grill, place fish pieces on heavy aluminum foil. For each serving, add 1 slice onion, salt and pepper to taste, 1 teaspoon butter, 4 tablespoons beer, and sprinkle on paprika. Seal each package tightly and place on hot grill, turning frequently. Recipe also good for chicken breasts.

Haddock And Shrimp Soup

1 pound haddock or other fish
¼ cup butter
½ teaspoon grated onion
½ teaspoon worcestershire sauce
¼ teaspoon garlic salt
1 cup rich, round crackers
1 can shrimp soup

Place fish in baking dish with soup. Do not dilute soup. Bake at 375 degrees for 20 minutes. Combine butter and seasoning, mix with cracker crumbs. Sprinkle on fish and bake another 10 minutes.

Trout Almondine

2 pounds fresh trout
¼ cup flour
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
1 teaspoon paprika
½ cup melted margarine
1 cup sliced almonds
4 teaspoons lemon juice
8 drops Tabasco sauce
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Cut fillets into six portions. Combine flour, seasoned salt, and paprika. Roll portions in flour mixture and place in a single layer, skin side down, in a well-greased baking dish. Drizzle 2 tablespoons melted butter over portions. Broil about 4 inches from source of heat 10 to 15 minutes until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork. While fish is boiling, saute almonds in remaining margarine until golden brown, stirring constantly.

Remove from heat and mix in lemon juice, hot pepper sauce, and parsley.

Pour over portions and serve at once. Serves 4 to 6.

ANSWER — Brice Kinnamon Jr., Cambridge, Md., wanted the sourdough starter recipe and recipes to use it. Lauri Lohmann, Durham, Ct., asks how do you store the starter if you don't want to use it on the tenth day. Thanks to Lucinda Lehman, Honey Grove, for sending a recipe for the starter.

Sourdough Culture

1 cup milk
1 cup flour

Allow milk to stand in a warm place for 24 hours. Using a wooden spoon, stir in flour. Never use a metal utensil when mixing sourdough. Allow to stand in warm place until it bubbles and becomes very sour. When ready, place in a large loosely covered container and refrigerate.

Replace or feed every 4 days by adding 1 cup milk, 1 cup flour, and ¼ cup sugar.

Do not use for at least 24 hours after feeding. If it doesn't increase fast enough, divide into 2 bowls. When you use the culture, always allow 1½ cups to remain in the container. If you can't use your culture for awhile, freeze it. Thaw for 24 hours or until it's bubbly again.

The longer a culture is kept the better it will get. If it's well cared for, it can be kept for years.

This can be used instead of sour cream, sour milk, and buttermilk that is requested in recipes. Share a cup of sourdough starter with a friend.

ANSWER — Jane Sauble, Manheim, wanted a recipe to make red beets with cranberry juice. Thanks to Anna Mary Wenger for sending a recipe that is taken from "From Mother's Cupboard," printed by the Hammer Creek Mennonite Church, available for $10 plus $3 for shipping and handling. Send your request to Anna Mary at 390 Sleepy Hollow Rd., Lititz, Pa. 17543.

Ruby Sauce For Beets

4 teaspoons cornstarch
2 teaspoons sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1⅓ cups cranberry juice
½ teaspoon orange peel, shredded
3 cans red beets

Cook over medium heat until thickened. Pour over cooked beets. This is enough for 3 cans sliced beats, drained, or the same amount of fresh beets, cooked. Simmer 10 minutes for beets to absorb flavor.

Potatoes

PASTIES

1½ pounds chuck or flank steak
3 or 4 medium potatoes
2 medium onions
3 or 4 sprigs parsley
1 medium size carrot, grated
1½ teapsoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
Dash Accent
Pie dough

Cut steak, potatoes, and onions into very fine cubes and add chopped parsley, grated carrot, salt, pepper and Accent.

Make enough pie dough for 3 double crust pies. Take portions of dough and roll out to the size of a salad plate (not too thick).

Place small portion of meat mixture in middle of dough and close dough over the mixture until it forms a crescent shape. Press edges of dough together to seal pastie and to keep meat juices inside. Pierce top of pastie with knife to allow steam to escape. Bake at 400 degrees for approximately 35 to 40 minutes. Each pastie should be one serving. Good hot or cold. Good with hot gravy.

NEW GENERATION POTATO SALAD

10 to 12 red-skinned potatoes
½ cup thinly sliced green onions
¾ teaspoon garlic salt, divided
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1 cup plain yogurt
2 tablespoons buttermilk
1 cup crumbled blue cheese

Cut potatoes into ¾-inch pieces. Cook in boiling water to cover 15 to 20 minutes or until tender; drain. Combine potatoes, onions, ½ teaspoon garlic salt, and pepper; toss gently to combine. Stir together yogurt, buttermilk, blue cheese, and remaining ¼ teaspoon garlic salt. Add to potatoes; toss gently to coat. Cover and chill at least 2 hours.

TASTY BEEF STUFFED POTATOES

1 pound boneless beef chuck top blade steaks, cut ½-inch thick
4 large baking potatoes
Oil
1 small green bell pepper, coarsely chopped
½ cup coarsely chopped shallots
2 tablespoons butter
Salt
Pepper
⅓ cup half and half
1 tablespoon Dijon-style mustard
½ cup shredded Swiss cheese

Scrub potatoes, prick each with a fork. Rub skins lightly with oil. Bake in a 375 degree oven for 50 to 60 minutes or until done. Meanwhile partially freeze beef chuck top blade steaks to firm. Divide each steak into 2 pieces, following natural seam and removing connective tissue between pieces. Cut each piece across the grain into thin strips. Cook green pepper and shallots in butter in skillet for 2 minutes. Add beef and continue cooking 3 to 4 minutes, stirring constantly. Season with salt and pepper; keep warm. Place half and half in small saucepan, stir in mustard and cheese and cook and stir over medium heat until cheese is melted.

Cut potatoes lengthwise across top; gently push ends to open and break up pulp. Spoon an equal amount of beef mixture into each potato; top with an equal amount of cheese sauce. Serve immediately. Serves 4.

On being a farm wife - And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

Few things brighten a day more than pleasant surprises — like one that arrived here recently.

A knock at the front door brought the delivery of a hard-backed volume titled ALLOWAY REMEMBERS. It's a collection of tales and facts of the history of New Jersey's Alloway Township, an area just across the Delaware River from Philadelphia. Sender Bill Haskett keeps in touch here periodically via personal notes and chaired the township's bicentennial celebration in 1988.

While we have no personal ancentral roots in New Jersey, the book is nevertheless fascinating. It's chocked full of interesting old photos, excepts from diaries, local significant inventions, census records of early settlers, histories of foundation families, important deeds, development of towns and transportation - the sort of historic record any community could potentially put together. This one is superbly done.

Of special interest to this food lover and cookbook collector is a section devoted to heirloom recipes taken from what were known as "keeping books." Keeping books — a term I'd never heard used before — were painstakingly hand-copied recipe collections, the kind a mother would pass on to her daughter long before anyone had heard of Betty Crocker, index card files or recipe management software for PCs.

In this age of microwave soups and instant bouillion cubes, directions for making "veal glue," "cake soup," or "pocket soup" totally intrigued me. While the directions suggest using a leg of veal, early pioneers were probably as likely to utilize a leg of venison.

After stripping the skin and fat, the flesh was removed and boiled gently for a long time, until the resulting broth would set up into a firm gel when chilled. After the broth was allowed to settle, the clear jelly was drawn off the top and placed in small amounts in tea cups. Those cups were placed in a kettle with some water in the bottom, and the water gently boiled until the jelly in the cups evaporated into a thick, gluey consistency.

After cooling, the resulting "glue" patties were turned out onto clean, dry flannel, which would draw out remaining moisture. They were to be turned every six to eight hours and put on new, dry flannel as needed until firm and dry. The resulting pieces could be conveniently carried along in a pocket until a traveler became hungry. A small-walnut-sized piece of the glue could then be heated and dissolved in a pint of water to provide the equivalent of instant soup for our forefathers.

And we thought fast food was new.

Not only did pioneer homemakers brew up food, with the absence of pharmacies and discount stores, they had to resort to devising their own medicinal and cosmetic substances.

Let's say you ran out of cold cream. You could take equal amounts of lard (rendered from the hogs you helped raise and butcher) and spermaceti (an oil taken from the head of a whale), add some blanched almonds ground into a fine powder, then mix than altogether with a little honey and rose water.

Rose water was made by steeping rose petals, preferably red Damask rodes, in simmering water, straining out the spent petals and adding more periodically until the desired strength was reached. It was used in everything from cosmetics to cookies as a flavoring or fragrance.

This wonderful volume of history and nostalgia was a delightful surprise to receive and a timely reminder of wisdom long ago shared by The Farmer's grandmother, a super lady, still sadly missed.

"Don't tell me about the good old days," she would chuckle. "I've lived them."

Antique Apple Tree Demonstration

YORK (York Co.) — York Countians are invited to the Landis Valley Museum in cooperation with the Lancaster-based Back Yard Fruit Growers (BYFG). A workshop that will teach fruit tree grafting will occur Saturday, March 19, from 1-4:30 p.m. at the Museum's Visitor Center, 2½ miles North of Lancaster on Route 272. The workshop shows gardeners interested in preserving "Antique" apple how to graft or attach old scion wood to a modern, healthy rootstock. The tree which is produced out of this union will have all the characteristics of the old tree — fruit color, taste, shape and size — only on a smaller and healthier tree; a tree that could be planted in the backyard, large or small.

Workshop attendees may bring pencil-sized sticks from a favorite apple tree they knew on the farm, or obtain from the museum and the fruit growers a scion from among 100 plus choices of historical apple trees. The BYFG and the museum staff will offer instruction, hands-on assistance, handouts and two ready-to-plant, labeled trees for $15 on Saturday afternoon, March 19. For reservations, call (717) 569-0401.

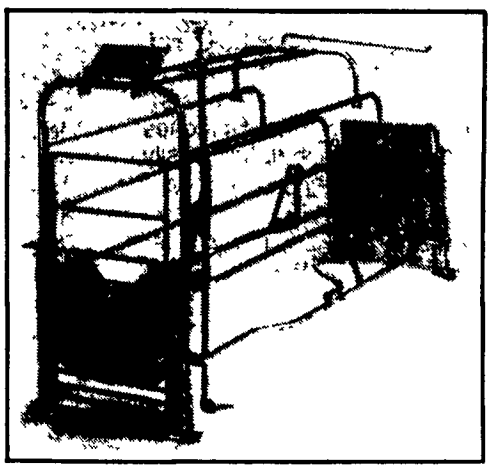
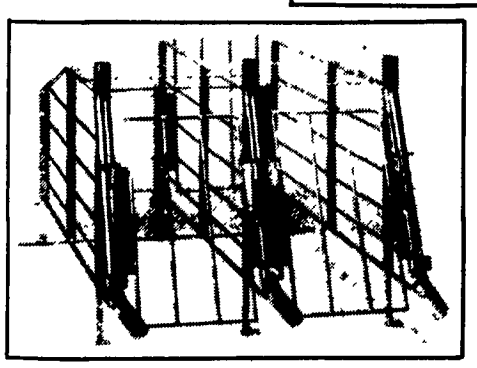
PIG SAVER "DUTCH CRATE"

Developed through testing in our research farms the goal was to develop a crate that nearly eliminates crushing, due to lay ens, unmatched durability and be easy to work around. All this has been achieved by a unique gravity flipgrail that forces sows to lie down slowly and using stainless steel for rear doors and legs, proven horizontal and solid steel rod construction. All this at a reasonable cost. Crate also can be installed on an angle.



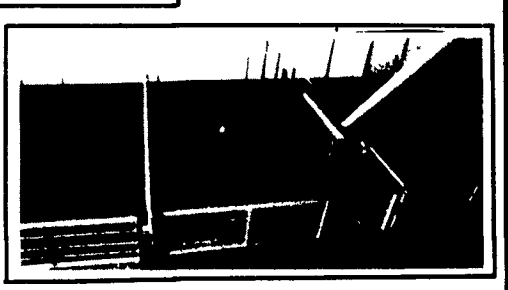


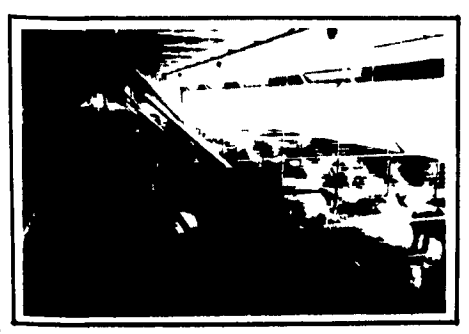
CONFINEMENT STALL

Developed recently in our R&D farm. Our goals were convenience, safety and durability. The low back and flat top rails are easy to reach over with no sharp edges. Stainless steel rear legs and front feet along with solid steel horizontal rods through punched uprights provide the strongest, most durable stall ever produced by Tri-County (21"-24" O.C. x 86")

NURSERY PENNING

Nursery penning has been improved by the use of an optional solid stainless steel panel on the front gates which keeps walkways clean. Stainless steel verticals on penning eliminates corrosion where penning attaches to the floor. Stainless steel drinker pipes & mounting brackets also increase durability.





FINISHING PENNING

Optional stainless steel verticals and fasteners offer improved durability over other similar types of penning. Loop and flapper latch arrangement eliminates the use of drop pins. Stainless steel fence line feeders provide excellent durability and a minimum of waste.

Phillie Phanatic Promotes Milk In Philadelphia Schools

PHILADELPHIA (Philadelphia Co.) — Philadelphia school children are getting excited about drinking milk and eating breakfast at school thanks to the newest milk spokesperson, the Phillie Phanatic.

As the spokesperson for the Middle Atlantic Milk Marketing Association (MAMMA) the Phanatic is visiting Philadelphia elementary schools to encourage students to drink milk and eat breakfast at school everyday.

This is part of the 1994 School Milk Initiative MAMMA has created to increase school milk sales throughout the entire Middle Atlantic region during the next few years.

MAMMA selected the School District of Philadelphia to launch the school milk program because of the great potential for growth in the school breakfast program. Growth in the school breakfast program will generate additional school milk sales because a half-pint of milk is a USDA requirement for each breakfast served.

The school breakfast program is a federally-subsidized program created to assure that a nutritious breakfast is available to all children. The premise behind the program is simple: hungry children can't learn.

The "Eat smart and be smart message" of the Phillie Phanatic will reach about 111,500 Philadelphia elementary students through 30 live school appearances and through the video-taped performances.

The Phanatic school tour is just one component of MAMMA's School Milk initiative. The visits lead up to the "I Love Milk" at breakfast contest being held March 7-11, during National School Breakfast week with the School District of Philadelphia.

Students who drink milk and eat breakfast every day will be eligible to win tickets to the May 22nd Phillies game or a Phanatic/Darren Daulton growth poster. More than 11,000 prizes will be awarded to winning students.

All Philadelphia elementary students will receive an oversized color photo of the Phillie Phanatic with a milk/school breakfast puzzle on the back, and colorful book covers bearing nutritional information.

To air next month is the Phanatic and milk television commercial targeting adults, but suitable for youngsters, too, to remind parents of the importance of drinking milk at any age.

Building Future Milk Sales

Between the 1991-92 school year and the 1992-93 school year 10,000 gallons of school milk sales were lost in the School District of Philadelphia, according to Jack Baldwin, president of Balford Farms, the school milk distributor.

"We want to regain the lost milk sales in the school district, but more importantly we want to get these children into the habit of drinking milk now when they are young. These children are the milk drinkers of tomorrow," said Lela Mummert, MAMMA program director, "so we are building a strong base for future sales."

With only a small percentage of the student body participating in the school breakfast program there is a great potential and likelihood of increased student participation.

"We could be serving as many school breakfasts as school lunches," said Thomas McGlinchy, director of Food Services for the School District of Philadelphia. "Currently, there is a

'I Love Milk' Breakfast Promotion

SOUTHAMPTON (Bucks Co.) — "I Love Milk" was the enthusiastic cry being chanted at the Darley Road Elementary School in Claymount, DE, on Friday, February 4. These students were celebrating winning the "I Love Milk Contest" sponsored by the Dairy Council of Southampton, and the Middle Atlantic Milk Marketing Association (MAMMA), in conjunction with the Brandywine (DE) School District.

During the week of Jan. 10-14, the Brandywine School District's 13 elementary schools competed in the contest. The goal of the contest was to increase breakfast participation in the schools — and the school with the greatest increase would be the winner. According to Kim Doherty, food service supervisor for the district, the Darley Road Elementary School increased its breakfast participation 106%. Before the contest this school averaged serving about 230 breakfasts each week; 513 breakfasts were served during the contest week.

While Philadelphia's WPVI-TV and Delaware's Cable Channel 2 covered the event, the winning kids were treated to ice-cream compliments of Hy-Point Dairy; a collection of children's books focusing on food, health, nutrition and farming, compliments of Dairy Council; and an exciting visit from the Phillie Phanatic compliments of MAMMA. Other prizes included colorful book covers, T-shirts, soccer balls, and a bike and helmet. The Delaware State Dairy Princess helped give out the awards.

On the day of the awards, Darley Road Principal Robert King, said that the children and parents still are behaving as if the contest was continuing because breakfast participation is remaining so high. It is the goal of MAMMA and Dairy Council that through these breakfast initiatives, eating breakfast will become a good habit to be adopted by these youngsters not just one week of the year — but for a lifetime. And that they will always love their milk!

huge gap. We serve 100,000 lunches daily, but only 25,000 breakfasts."

The number of students eating school breakfasts has doubled over the past three years through the promotional efforts of McGlinchy and the food service staff, however, he believes the Phanatic campaign will make a greater impact on the students than school food service could with their limited resources.

"The Phanatic is unique. The kids go wild over him. He gets kids excited about school breakfast in ways that we can't. The Phanatic campaign has focused professional marketing techniques on our students, along with the planning and the resources being used, it is by far the best promotion we've ever had," said McGlinchy.

Doubling the current number of students eating breakfast at school would generate an additional 281,000 gallons of milk sold in the district each year. That may be the case during the next few years, but for now McGlinchy thinks a 20 percent increase is more reasonable. .

"Any increase is worth the effort. So many of our kids are hungry and research is constantly proving that before kids can learn they've got to have a good meal. Our food service staff feels that feeding the children is just as important (to learning) as books."

The Philadelphia school food service staff was awarded the U.S. Department of Agriculture's "Best Practices" award for their gains in student participation in the school breakfast program and in their methods use to achieve those gains.

Making the students and parents aware of the school breakfast program is half the battle. McGlinchy believes that the students will get hooked on school breakfast after they try it the first time.

The Middle Atlantic Milk Marketing Association is the only qualified regional dairy promotion program that includes advertising, nutrition education, retail merchandising, school food service, and communications for the entire Middle-Atlantic Milk marketing area. More than 5,000 dairy farm families support the MAMMA program.

Pa. Dairy Seeks Dairy Spokesperson

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — The Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program and the Pennsylvania Dairymen's Association have created a program to provide the state with a group of dairy spokespersons. The "Dairy Deputies" are people who care about the dairy industry and are willing to speak publicly about the industry.

"We created this program to get more producers involved in the promotion of our industry," says Betsy Dupuis, Pennsylvania Dairy Communications Director. "We need a network of individuals who are available to respond on a statewide basis to media stories and dairy producers are the most credible spokespersons."

"Dairy Deputies" will be asked to work in their local communities, speaking to civic groups, media representatives, and other community leaders. They'll also support statewide events and serve as sources for the media.

"Dairy Deputies are the 'protectors' of the dairy industry. They're the people who will help to change myths and negative stories about the dairy industry. We seek a group of active dairy producers to improve the image of dairy products and the dairy industry," adds Dupuis.

All "Deputies" will participate in a two-day training seminar. This program, scheduled for March 14 and 15, in Harrisburg, will include information about environmental, product, economic and animal issues. Participants will also learn interviewing techniques and presentation tips. They'll also participate in "mock" interviews and review their efforts.

The seminar is free and space is available on a first-come, first-served basis. Producers interested in the program should contact Dupuis at (717) 787-6903.

Maryland Chamber Recognizes Farmer

BALTIMORE, Md. — Maryland farm entrepreneur Steve Wilson, 34, will join 33 of the nation's top farmers in Baltimore for the 38th National Outstanding Young Farmer (NOYF) Awards Congress February 17-20. Among those leaders, four will be honored as 1994 National Outstanding Young Farmers.

This annual event, sponsored by The U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce (Jaycees), Deere & Company, and the Outstanding Farmers of America (OFA) Fraternity, honors the achievements of a diverse group of enterprising farmers across the United States. The Frederick (Maryland) Jaycees, affiliated with The U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce, is hosting the NOYF Awards Congress with assistance from fellow Jaycees across Maryland.

Hundreds of past winners, dignitaries and Jaycees will attend the ceremony at the Sheraton Inner Harbor Hotel in Baltimore, including National Junior Chamber President Matt Shapiro.

Wilson began farming at the age of four on his family's farm. After investigating other career options, he chose farming. He is now sole proprietor of a 365-acre dairy and swine operation near Parkton, Maryland.

Wilson lost over 40 percent of his calves to a problem eventually linked to the water supply. Until the source of the problem was discovered, all calves were treated at birth with epinephrine and duperine to curb mortality. He was forced to purchase replacements to maintain the same herd size.

Wilson adds Hershey chocolate and Oreo cookies to the cow's rations, increasing energy in the mix, lowering cost of feed, and allowing Hershey to dispose of excess products.

Wilson developed and built a new trigon milking parlor, decreasing the time the cattle spend standing on the concrete floor as well as labor costs. To improve the soil, he avoids ground compaction to keep the earth aerated, decreasing chances of run-off. He has put all tillable ground into contour strips, practically eliminating erosion and significantly increasing crop production. He also maintains grassy waterways to decrease the amount of potential herbicidal run-off.

Wilson is involved in West Liberty United Methodist Church, Maryland Holstein Club, 4-H and Baltimore Holstein Club. He was named the Maryland Outstanding Junior Holstein Breeder in 1992. Wilson believes educating the consumer on the food and health value of dairy products is essential to continue growth of the dairy industry. He also believes in promoting the industry to other countries. He and his wife, Kelly, host foreign exchange students and aid in the selection of U.S. exchange students.

The U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce provides personal and professional development through civic involvement to men and women ages 21-39. There are some 200,000 members in more than 4,000 chapters across the nation. For more information, contact The U.S. Junior Chamber National Service Center at 1-800-JAYCEES.

Pa.'s Role In Underground Railroad

Pennsylvania played a crucial role in the flight to freedom for many fugitive slaves who had escaped from the south. Nearby Columbia and Wrightsville and other towns along the Susquehanna River were stops on one of the many routes used by escaped slaves whose ultimate destination was Canada which had outlawed slavery in the early 1800's. Dr. Leroy T. Hopkins discusses the people, both black and white, places, and events important to this movement in his talk "Marching to Zion: The Underground Railroad In Central Pennsylvania" to be held at the Hershey Museum on Monday, February 28, at 1 P.M. The program is free with museum admission.

Fellowship Of Christian Farmers Help Albanians

TRUMANSBURG, N.Y. — George and Julie Holmes of 3220 Jacksonville Road, Trumansburg, just returned from a two-week work crusade with Fellowship of Christian Farmers, Int. to Albania. They worked through, Hope for the World Missions in Albania.

Albania has been closed to missions work for more than 40 years. The former dictator named Hoxha turned the country to Communism. It was known as the only totally atheistic country in the world.

Hoxha convinced the people that the United States people were coming to "eat" the people of Albania. That is why there are spears on the grape arbor poles and as many as 700,000 bunkers throughout the country of Albania. Hoxha told the Albanian people that they were the "salt of the earth." When they found out the truth — that they were really behind the rest of the world — it broke there moral and the people destroyed all factories and industry because the Albanians didn't want communism to come back.

Albania now has a two-party democracy that is two years old. The country is struggling under the Presidency of Sali Brishnee. It is battling with 70% unemployment and a yearly income of $250 per person.

George and Julie working with Hope for the World Mission, remodeled a Deaf School with more than 278 children. The group of eight farmers and two wives were from all over the USA. They sparkled, painted, replaced windows and window panes, doors and did kitchen repairs and played with the children.

The group also traveled to small farming villages accessible by foot or helicopter. They delivered much needed seed corn and a variety of vegetable seeds. They got to see on the farm practices. Their much needed irrigation system is needing repairs. They endure 100 degree summer temperatures with little rain on heavy clay soil. The group also encouraged the farmers and shared the Word of God with the people.

Even with mild 50-degree days, children have a hard time attending school. The schools have missing windows, no books, no heat, no lunches, and no bathroom facilities for the students. Many walk one to three hours to attend school. Children are required to attend school, but some lack shoes, pencils, and paper and as a result don't attend.

Holmes' found the Albanian people very hospitable. They are eager to receive Bibles, and learn about the Word of God.

If you are interested in learning more about a Fellowship of Christian Farmers, Int. 1995 Work Crusade to Mexico, Jamaica, Russia, Texas, Ukraine or Albania, please contact George or Julie Holmes, 3220 Jacksonville Road, Trumansburg, NY 14886.

Frozen Twin Lambs Survive Frigid Weather

GAY N. BROWNLEE
Somerset Co. Correspondent

ROCKWOOD (Somerset Co.) -- David Svonavec, following his usual morning ritual rose at 4 p.m. on Saturday, January 15. Outside, an arctic winter storm, dubbed the "Siberian Express" by weather forecasters, was gripping the eastern United States. It had sent the mercury plummeting to minus 22 degrees and lower. Fierce winds lowered the chill factor to life-threatening levels.

The coal-industry businessman thought about his kids' animals in the barn and wondered if they were okay. They were potential county fair 4-H projects — market swine, steers and lambs. One pregnant ewe was nearing her due date.

So while Betty Lou, his wife, and their kids — Heidi, 13; Luke, 12; and Gabe, 8, — slept peacefully upstairs, Svonavec, listening to his conscience, donned heavy coveralls, then went to the barn. He needed the assurance that the animals were well.

"I saw one (newborn) lamb," said Svonavec, "and I looked, and then I saw the other one. They were frozen."

But they were alive. Apparently, the bigger lamb was delivered first, noted Svonavec, recalling its extremely poor condition with its under skin layered with ice. The smaller lamb, born later, was also icy.

Quickly, he removed his coveralls. Into each leg section he gently placed a stiff lamb. Gathering the bundle in his arms, he sped toward the house basement, not considering, as he ran, his own exposure to the frigid elements.

He needed assistance. Rousing Betty Lou, the two then laid the bedraggled, ovine twins on rug-covered, low-temperature heating pads. Carefully, they used hair blow dryers to penetrate more heat through the icy skin of the lambs. Too much heat at the outset, they knew, was also dangerous.

Svonavec gently rubbed them to increase circulation.

"I came down and looked at them and said to myself, 'Why does the man bother?'" said Betty Lou. "I thought it was too late."

"I've seen a lot of lambs that were a lot healthier that didn't make it," she added. She said the ear of the largest lamb was covered with ice at least a quarter of an inch thick and it was awkwardly bent.

Hopeless as it seemed, the two continued their relentless life-saving effort. Finally, little gasps were heard with long seconds between them, according to Betty Lou.

But every time, Svonavec and his wife stopped applying heat, the coal immediately resurfaced to the lambs' outer skin. The two worked for hours, unable to stop as long as there was life.

After three hours the lambs appeared better. They needed their mother. "As soon as they were warmed up, I got the ewe," said Svonavec.

However, the 1992 Grand Champion of the Somerset Co. Lamb Jackpot Show (showed by Luke), was completely disoriented in the unfamiliar surroundings, making it initially impossible for the lambs to be naturally nourished by her.

The kids, who discovered, not only that twin lambs were born but also were in the house, were ecstatic. Their mission was to milk the ewe, then bottle-feed the lambs.

They named the bigger lamb "Wrinkles," and the other, "Floppy."

Tuesday finally arrived with temperatures moderating sufficiently to warrant the trio's return to the barn — not a moment too soon for Betty Lou. The atmosphere in her gracious house was evincing unwelcome odors from below.

From storage, Luke's baby sweaters and vests, worn also by Gabe, were cut down the front and stripped over the lambs for added warmth.

A family friend, hearing of Saturday's events, told the tale to a Johnstown television personality. The story went through western and central Pennsylvania TV news like wildfire and was picked up by the Associated Press.

Coming when winter's weather had paralyzed millions in the country and the major earthquake had shaken California, television-watching was the "In" activity. Viewers had a viewing diet of lowering news that sunk emotional spirits.

So when the story of Svonavec's lamb rescue was aired over CNN and reportedly mentioned by Paul Harvey, the Svonavec's were astonished.

Folks responded from around the nation. The story had boosted their morale they told the Svonavecs, and helped to alleivate mild feelings of depression.

"I just had a feeling in my hands when I was rubbing them," said Svonavec, "that mine were the hands, but the power in them came from a higher source. I think there was divine intervention," he said, "because they (the lambs) shouldn't have lived."

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

The weather seems to be the focus of discussion among folks this winter. We have had to cancel two well-planned programs at our church and now hope that we can hold the one in March.

Schools have cancelled classes quite often. This reminds me of the year when, in order to get our children to the bus, we had to clean the old beater-manure spreader and haul them with the tractor. Another winter we had no electricity for five days, and we melted snow for water. Luckily, at that time, we heated our house with a coal stove in the living room. The dust and ashes made a mess but we kept warm. We've never had to worry about food as our freezers and cellar shelves were full from the summer's harvest.

This year our driveway has been our main problem as snow and ice built up on it. Our son, Philip, has opened it with the tractor and snow plow several times. The other day he and his wife, Lisa, went cross-country skiing, and we kept the baby. He slept most of the time so I barely got to hold him. He has a head of red hair is growing rapidly.

Allen has spent some of his spare time making a pretty cherry shelf to hand on the wall for small antiques. It is heavy and so he used his stud finder before hanging it up. He has also cracked a lot of black and English walnuts for me. It seems that almost everytime that I bake, I use nuts in the recipes.

His eyesight had been deteriorating after his cataract operation two years ago so last week he had a laser operation and now can see much better. It certainly is remarkable that modern medicine can correct such problems. We never appreciate what we have until we lose it - be it health or something else.

Population Grows In N.E. Pa., Drops In Philadelphia, Allegheny

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — Northeastern Pennsylvania continues to show high rates of population growth during the 1990s, while the commonwealth's two largest counties are still losing population, according to the Pennsylvania State Data Center at Penn State Harrisburg.

"The three fastest growing counties between 1990 and 1992 were all in the northeast corner of the state," says Ron Uroda, demographic services coordinator at the Data Center. "Pike County had the highest growth rate at 16.4 percent, followed by the counties of Monroe (9.5 percent) and Wayne (5.0 percent)."

Only six counties lost population in the 1990-1992 period, with Philadelphia County experiencing the largest population decline (33,000). The second largest population loss occurred in Allegheny County, which decreased by 2,053 between 1990 and 1992. Other counties losing population during this period were Cameron, Cambria, Lackawanna, and Northumberland.

Only 19 counties had growth rates of 2 percent or more, while 42 counties had growth rates of 2 percent or less.

Bucks County led the state with a total population gain of 15,105 persons. Four other counties that grew by 10,000 persons or more were Chester, Montgomery, Lancaster and York.

Where's Your Money Going?

HONESDALE (Wayne Co.) — One of the first things to do if you find yourself having money problems is to figure out where your money is going. If you don't know where it is going, you can't figure out how to spend less, according to Debra Bryant.

Most families can tell you exactly how much they are paying for their rent, utilities, and car payments, but have little idea about where the rest of their money goes. Most of us eat, pay for transportation, buy clothes, enjoy a little entertainment, and even pay our monthly bills, but do we know enough about these spending patterns to be able to budget and plan?

If not, it's time to get busy! Get your family together and make up a chart of monthly income and spending so you have a summary of where the money comes from and where it goes.

Estimate your income by month, from all sources and for all members of your family. Include net or take-home salaries and wages, interest and dividends from savings and investments, Social Security benefits, unemployment compensation, the value of your food stamps, and any other monetary benefits you receive. If certain benefits are expected to run out in two or three months, be sure that is clear on your monthly income chart.

Make a list of all monthly expenses for all family members. To keep the picture clear, group these expenses by category. Include: savings (both short and long term), allowances for everyone, clothing (new purchases and upkeep such as dry cleaning), contributions, food at home and away, gifts for birthdays and other occasions, housing (mortgage, rent, taxes, insurances, maintenance repairs, utilities, and fuel), life insurance, health (insurance, doctor, dentist, and drugs), personal improvement (newspapers, magazines, books, tuition, lessons) recreation, and transportation (license fees, car payments, insurance, gasoline and repairs.

Once you have your monthly income and expenses listed, look for areas where you are spending more than you thought. If your expenses are more than your income, it's time to make some hard decisions. As a family, consider these cost-reducing activities to help you get by on less:

- Spend less for some items. Buy store or generic brands rather than advertised brand names. Buy used items, including cars, appliances, clothing, and sporting goods.
- Make use of family skills instead of paying for services.
- Pack your lunch instead of buying it.
- Take advantage of free community services and entertainment.
- Barter with neighbors and friends.

If you'd like help tracking your spending, plan to attending Tracking your Spending: Where Do All the Dollars Go? February 15 from 7-9 p.m. at the Penn State Cooperative Extension Office, Courthouse, Honesdale. Call now to register for this free class (717) 253-5970 ext. 239.

Pets Soothe Children's Negative Emotions

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

GLENMOORE (Chester Co.) — Feeling angry? Depressed? Frustrated?

Cuddle up to a bunny. Or a goat. Even an iguana running up and down your arm is thought to ease stress, calm nerves, and give you that feeling of well being.

That's what a pilot program has discovered at Devereux, a school for troubled youth.

"It's amazing the difference a pet can make in the life of these kids," said Roy Erdman, who teaches at the Devereux's Brandywine Center that houses about 100 boys between the ages of 7 and 16, who mostly have been diagnosed with emotional and developmental disabilities.

The program is referred to as pet facilitated therapy, but for centuries parents have known that a dog or cat in a child's life can be a calming influence when facing life's tough battles.

From the school's beginning, the founder, Helena Devereux, planned that a dog should always be kept as a house pet.

But government policies on cleanliness intervened. It seemed easier to get rid of the dog than to clean up the mud and shedding hair that a dog might track in the house or the flea bites a child might contract.

So for years, no dog or other animal crossed the threshhold of Devereux grounds.

That all changed three years ago when Roy Erdman, outdoor education specialist, instigated the pet therapy program.

Skeptical professionals are now convinced that pets indeed have a positive effect on the children.

Erdman said, "The behavioral difference between the boys at the zoo compared to elsewhere is like day and night. Kids just do better around animals. Animals are a calming influence and help children interact."

Ideally, the hope is that children will transfer their ability to care for animals and maintain self-control to their interaction with humans.

So far, the study does show that the children working with the animals have less emotional crises. The therapy can also be used as crisis management in allowing kids who are having a bad day to come to the center and interact with the animals.

Children involved in pet therapy adopt an animal of their own. They can chose either from the offspring of animals on the grounds or from a pet store. But before they do so, they must learn about the animal by studying a skill card that explains the care and characteristics of the animal.

It is that child's responsibility to care for the pet, and when released from the school, the child takes the pet along home if the parents approve.

The children also participate in local projects by taking animals to nursing homes or participating in show and tell with students not involved in pet therapy.

Quails and doves are popular projects. Recently, the students hatched four quail in an incubator. Not only do the birds make interesting pets, but by watching, children learn how doves make soft nests from feathers and hear the cooing sounds of a contented bird.

"Did you know this interesting fact?" Louis, a student, asked a visitor at the center recently. "When you see birds sitting on a wire and their bellies are puffed out — that is really a pocket of air that forms under their feathers to keep them warm."

Ed was eager to show how a chinchilla takes a dust bath to clean its fur. The dust is a mixture of sand and talcum powder, and Ed sees that the chinchilla has a dust bath weekly.

As one student trimmed the toenails of his rabbit, he explained that the proper way to pick up the rabbit is by its skin on the back of its neck.

"Whiskers are important to rabbits," he said. "It helps them to smell better. Some people trim their rabbit's whiskers, but I don't recommend it," he said.

The student said that he and some of his friends experiemented by putting rabbits and guinea pigs in the same cage and found that they will groom each other.

A pet cemetary is located on the grounds where children bury animals that die and the students learn to deal with grief as a natural process of life.

When students report to the class, they must first do chores such as changing water, emptying feeders, and filling with fresh feed before spending individual time with an animal of their choice.

Erdman has nothing but praise for the program. Initial fears that some children might mistreat the animals since cruelty to animals can be a sign of emotional illness have been unfounded.

"We started the program as a demonstration to prove its worth. Now, after three years, it has proved its success and we are expanding the program to other campuses," Erdman said.

The Devereux School was founded by Helena Devereux, a pioneer in the field of special education, and now has campuses in 13 states. It is considered the largest not-for-profit provider of mental health and developmental disability treatment program in the U.S. Sylvester Stallone was one of its graduates.

Specialized treatment is available for children, adolescents, adults, and families. For more information about the program, call (215) 942-5900.

After Ed gives his chinchilla a dust bath, the pair spend time together.

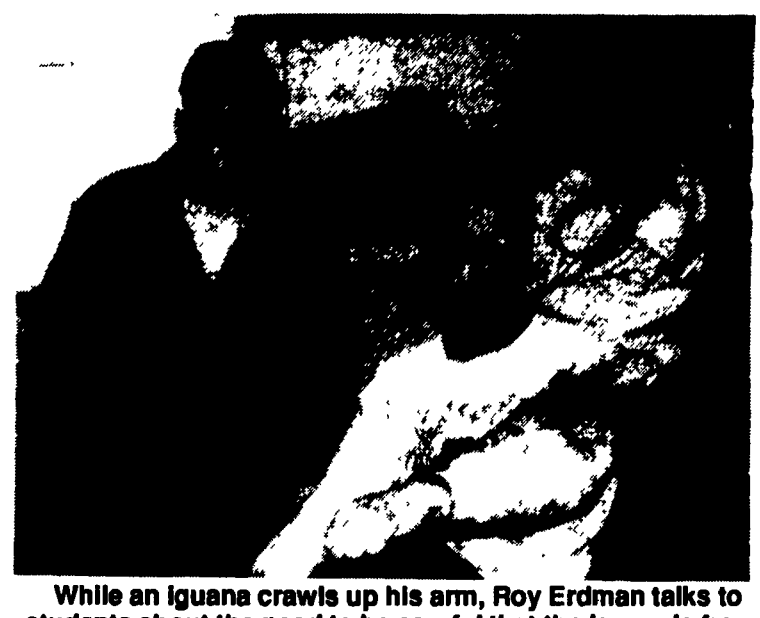
Les sits patiently while a dove crawls on his shoulders. Even children with attention deficit disorders, display remarkable patience and calmness when spending time at the zoo.

It's toe nail trimming time for this rabbit. Students who participate in the pet therapy program must first learn the pet's requirements for housing, feeding, and handling.

This quail is a bit tamer than those in the wild and allows students to observe it closely.



While an iguana crawls up his arm, Roy Erdman talks to students about the need to be careful that the iguana's fragile tail is not broken. Erdman said, "The behavioral difference between the boys at the zoo compared to elsewhere is like day and night. Kids just do better around animals. Animals are a calming influence and help children interact."

Grassland FFA Celebrates National FFA Week

By Andrea Snader
FFA Member

Every year, the National FFA designates one week a year as "National FFA Week" in order to promote agriculture education.

Since agriculture education and the FFA ensure a steady supply of young professionals to meet the growing demands in the areas of science, business, and technology of agriculture, the theme chosen for this year was "Leadership for America."

FFA Week was officially held Feb. 19-26.

This year, the Grassland FFA decided to undertake a couple of activities in order to promote the organization around the Garden Spot High School. For starters, the Chapter decorated a showcase in the school hallway. Included was a miniature replica of a hydropnics (plants gorwn in water supplemented with nutrients) and aquaculture (fish production) unit such as the chapter is working with.

The FFA held other activities. On Monday, alumni members attended an FFA meeting. There was also a Rec Night following the meeting. Tuesday, was "FFA dress-up day." FFA members wore something with the FFA symbol or name on it. On Thursday, there was a faculty and alumni buffet held in the school library. This was sponsored by and run by the FFA members.

On Friday, the annual Agriculture Job Fair and FFA Quiz Bowl was held. This gave agriculture education students the opportunity to gain information on what is available to them through the FFA organization, companies, and colleges. The Quiz Bowl gives teams of FFA members from different schools the chance to compete in order to see who is the most knowledgable about the FFA.

Cargill To Donate Books To Promote Stewardship

MAUMEE, Ohio — The Cargill Grain Division's Eastern Geography initiated a program to increase community and employee awareness about environmental concerns and the company's commitment to protecting the environment.

Forty-three Cargill Grain offices will participate in the project by presenting three environmental books to public and high-school libraries throughout Alabama, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Georgia, Mississippi, Ohio, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina.

The books, which were selected by Cargill's Corporate Environmental, Health and Safety Department, are consistent with Cargill's pledge to the continuous improvement of its environmental, health and safety performance.

"It is our hope that these book donations will provide lasting value and education about the environment for both the community and for Cargill employees," said Doug Jensen, eastern geography superintendent for the Cargill Grain Division.

The three books are titled "The 'e' Factor, the Bottom-Line Approach to Environmentally Responsible Business," "50 Simple Things Your Business Can Do to Save the Earth," and "The 1994 Information Please Environmental Almanac."

Deadline For Disaster Request Nears

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — Corn and sorghum producers who suffered disaster losses during 1993 have only until March 4 to request federal assistance through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS).

That announcement was made last week by Grant Buntrock, administrator of the ASCS.

According to Buntrock, those who request assistance will gain eligibility for possible forgiveness of overpayments they may have received in advance for deficiencies.

"Even if the disaster loss was not large enough to qualify for disaster payment, it may mean eligibility for some advance deficiency overpayment forgiveness," Buntrock said in a recent statement.

The USDA prohibits discrimination in its programs on the basis of race, color, national origin, sex, religion, age, disability, political beliefs, and marital or familial status.

Poly SQUARE

CALF HUTCHES
#1 in Sales World-Wide

Poly Square Means Healthier Cows

The Poly Square Big Foot is constructed of Opaque material to eliminate the solar effect. It blocks out sunheat-not sunlight. Poly Square's inverted ribs and 5'(W)x7'6"(L) make it the biggest unit on the market today and extremely wind resistant. It has no pop rivets-which means no breaks or cracks for snow and rain to sift in. The unit weighs 100 pounds plus manger & buckets. And Poly Square Big Foot is large enough so your calf can lay in the center, away from cold walls in the winter. Use Poly Square with our side feed station and bottle holder which is perfect for use with a fence in a more traditional setting.

New Side Hay Feeder—Made especially for Poly Square Big Foot, no other unit has this feature. Also has a center roof vent for better air movement.

ALSO AVAILABLE:
Poly Domes, Silo Chute Hoppers, Silo Chute Liners, Foot Baths

Anderson Urges Grange Support Of Reform Package

CORTLAND, N.Y. — New York State Grangers need to support State Sen. Nancy Larraine Hoffmann's government reform package if they have any hope of changing the way business is done in Albany, said Terry Anderson, the former hostage who now heads the government reform group New York Renaissance.

Anderson, speaking to more than 150 Grangers gathered here Feb. 12 for an annual Legislative Day conference, said the organization's grassroots endorsement of Hoffmann's package is critical in the effort to send a clear message to lawmakers that it's time for a change. The Grange's state leadership already supports Hoffmann's proposals, but each of the Grange's 400 local units could exert some pressures of their own.

"Hey, it's your government. If you don't like what it's doing, make it change," Anderson said. "We've got to get really active. We'be got to be insistent."

Anderson, who conceded that his celebrity gives him an "automatic audience," has used New York Renaissance to criticize much of the way state government works. "The legislature is inefficient, secretive, and unresponsive to the needs of the people of the state," he said. "The bureaucracy is worse — slow, politicized, and overly complex."

Anderson urged Grangers to write to their own legislators outlining their concerns and demanding to know whether they would support reform bills. Many later said they would.

Anderson was joined at the session by Hoffmann, the Syracuse democrat who is covering the state seeking support for her "Four Steps to Reforming State Government." She called the legislature a "partisan legislature that is worse than any other in the nation," and called it a "terribly corrupt system of government."

Hoffmann's package bills calls for opening closed door party caucuses whenever public business is being discussed, ending all-night legislative sessions, eliminating lulus for the performance of political duties, and itemization of the legislative budget. She is calling for the consolidation of poliucal staffs of legislative leaders, and is pushing two campaign reform bills, as well.

Hoffmann, who noted that Governor Cuomo is embracing the open meetings concept, said that while "the message is sinking in" in Albany, much work remains to be done.

Other speakers at the Grange session included Assembly man Dan Fessenden, the ranking minority member on the Assembly Agriculture Committee, and Assemblyman Bill Magee, Both men were critical of the way state government is run, and Fessenden urged Grangers to stay active in their legislative efforts.

"The voice of rural New York is very soft in Albany, and it's getting softer and softer," he said. "We can't afford to have the Grange's role get any smaller."

Chesapeake Bay Pact Seen As National Model

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — A precedent-setting pact between the USDA and the Chesapeake Bay Program is aimed at ensuring a broader and more coordinated approach to managing resources, controlling agricultural runoff, and reducing nutrients in the Chesapeake Bay restoration effort.

The agreement targets the USDA to provide an integrated approach to environmentally sound and economically viable farm management practices in the Chesapeake Bay watershed states of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia.

The USDA's approach to agricultural management in the Chesapeake region ultimately will be incorporated in watershed-based agricultural efforts throughout the country.

The pact was signed Tuesday, Jan. 25, by James Lyons, USDA assistant secretary for natural resources and environment, and Governor William Donald Schaefer, of Maryland, for the Chesapeake Bay Program, at the winter meeting of the Maryland Association of Conservation Districts in Annapolis.

"The Bay Agreement serves as a model for what we can do in other places," said James Lyons. Through the agreement, members of the USDA will work closely with agricultural agencies in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and the other federal agencies involved in the Chesapeake Bay restoration to better deliver services to farmers.

Schaefer, who serves as the chairman of the Chesapeake Bay Program's policymaking body the Chesapeake Executive Council, said reducing the amount of nitrogen and phosphorus entering the Bay from farmland was a key to the USDA-Chesapeake Bay Program pact. "We have to do it faster, and we have to do more," Schaefer said. The Chesapeake Bay Program is committed to reducing nutrients entering the Bay by 40 percent by the year 2000.

Nutrients enter the Chesapeake from many sources, but studies have shown that agricultural activities, such as crop production and livestock operations are a chief source of the Chesapeake Bay's nutrient pollution. In 1992, the Bay Program's Chesapeake Executive Council launched the Agricultural Nonpoint Source Initiative to address the challenges that farmers face in reducing agricultural runoff and nutrient pollution. The findings from the initiative were presented to the Chesapeake Executive Council a year later, in September 1993. The USDA role in the Chesapeake Bay restoration is the direct result of recommendations made by the Nonpoint Source Initiative.

"The Bay Agreement strengthens the team approach," Lyons said. "The USDA works very closely with landowners and land-users and we are committed to sharing ideas and sharing resources."

This approach, Lyons said, will include a coordinated effort involving the USDA's Soil Conservation Service, its extensive service, and its Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. Under the new agreement, the

Speaker Lists New Products For Old Problems

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — "He that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils."

Spoken four centuries ago by Francis Bacon, a British statesman and philosopher, those words still ring true today for Mid-Atlantic area crop farmers coping with triazine-resistant weeds such as pigweed and lamb's-quarters.

Some new products and techniques for dealing with old weed problems have been shared by Ronald L. Ritter, agronomy weed control specialist for the Cooperative Extension Service, University of Maryland at College Park.

Dr. Ritter was the leadoff speaker during the 14th annual Delmarva Corn and Soybean Conference, held Wednesday, Feb. 16, in the Wicomico Youth and Civic Center at Salisbury. More than 400 farmers and agribusiness representatives were in attendance.

Ritter reported that Broadstrike is a new herbicide that is effective against stubborn pests such as pigweed, lambs quarters, and other triazine-resistant weeds.

The new chemical is available in package-mix formulation with an established product such as Dual to permit pre-emergence application for season-long control of a wide spectrum of weed species.

The mix can be used in both corn and soybean fields. But it has one weakness — lack of good morning-glory control.

Ritter reminded growers that a Dual+atrazine package mix is popular in the Mid-Atlantic area for control of annual grasses and yellow nutsedge in cornfields.

But last year, a new product, Frontier, was introduced that provides similar weed control. When packaged in combination with atrazine, it is sold under the trade name, Guardsman.

The combination product gives results similar to those of a Dual+atrazine mix for broad-spectrum control of grasses and broadleaf weeds. However, it is suitable only for use in fields planted to corn — not soybeans.

Two other agrichemical products are expected to be available this year for weed control in cornfields. They are Surpass — made by Zeneca Agricultural Products — and Harness Plus, from Monsanto.

Actually, the two products are identical, Ritter noted. And they are similar to Frontier or Dual.

A new post-emergence chemical, Tough, was introduced last year for use in cornfields. And indications are that it will be priced about one-third lower than in 1993.

Tough is a contact herbicide that is effective against persistent pests like pigweed, lambs quarters, and velvetleaf. It has tremendous activity on these and other broadleaf weeds. And it is not volatile, so it avoids the herbicide drift problems long associated with 2, 4-D.

Ritter issued a warning for Delmarva area farmers who used Scepter for chemical weed control last year in soybean fields.

Because of droughty conditions last summer, there could be considerable carryover of Scepter. So he advised farmers to plant soybeans in those fields again this year. Or, try to plant one of the new hybrid corn varieties that is resistant to Scepter.

Ritter had a final comment about two herbicides suitable for weed control in soybean fields.

Gemini is a useful sulfonylurea compound that is not likely to be available after 1994. Canopy is a new product that may be a suitable replacement.

But Ritter intends to take a hard look at Canopy's performance next year in University of Maryland research plots to see if there might be some injury to soybeans planted on light, sandy soils.

Chesapeake Bay Pact

USDA will:

Implement a new program, total resource management on agricultural lands, USDA will direct its agencies — including the Soil Conservation Service, Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service, and extension service — to work with the Bay jurisdictions to develop and implement this planning process. It will provide an integrated approach to farm management featuring a wide range of best management practices to help farmers protect natural resources while maintaining production goals.

• Develop innovative methods and research to protect the Bay. Work with the Chesapeake Bay Program to spearhead research crucial to providing farmers with innovative methods to help protect the Chesapeake Bay.

• Coordinate federal agricultural efforts on behalf of the Bay by participating in various Bay Program committees.

• Cooperatively implement federal and state agricultural pollution prevention programs to help stop pollution before it starts.

• Secure appropriate funding and staffing resources to carry out its goals.

"A lot of good stewards already working with the land are right here in this room," Lyons told the conservation district members in attendance during the signing. "Good partnerships make for good conservation."

U.S. Senator Paul S. Sarbanes (D-Md.), who attended the agreement signing, said the USDA's new commitment to the Chesapeake Bay restoration was important to the effort's success. "No other federal agency can reach as many landowners on the ground," he said, adding that the USDA will bring to farmers not only a knowledge of good conservation and environmental practices, but good economic practices as well.

The Chesapeake Bay Program is the multigovernmental partnership that has been directing and conducting the Chesapeake Bay restoration since 1983. The Chesapeake Bay Program includes the states of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia; Washington, D.C.; the Chesapeake Bay Commission, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency representing the federal government; and participating citizens advisory groups.

IMMUNE RESPONSES

H. S. Siegel
Professor Department of Poultry Science

Response to stress by poultry depends on the integration of the nervous and hormonal systems.

Corticosteroids, which are produced by the adrenal glands, and stress reduce the size of lymphatic glands and the numbers of circulating lymphocytes, the cells responsible for producing antibodies and other immunological functions. At the same time, the number of heterophils, a second cell species, is increased.

The avian immune system has multiple functions. The "B-lymphocytes" (bursa-derived) produce antibodies when activated to plasma cells. The "T-lymphocytes" (thymus-derived) function in cell-mediated immunity and act as effectors to modulate proliferation and function of other immune cells.

Some T-cells directly attack foreign molecules. In addition, macrophages, monocytes, and granulocytes in blood and tissues are antigen-presenting cells or scavenger-type cells that absorb foreign material or bacteria.

Mechanism And Effects Of Corticosteroids On Immune Cells

Corticosteroids form a complex with receptors in lymphoid cells and then pass into the nucleus of the cell to influence genetic organization. Stress increases the amount of corticosteroid bound in lymphoid tissue cells.

Cellular and hormonal responses begin shortly after antigens, such as Salmonella or E. coli, enter the body. The time and sequence of this response depend on the antigen type, the method by which the antigen enters the body, and the amount of antigen.

For example, within 15 minutes after intravenous injection of Salmonella pullorum antigen, plasma corticosteroid begins to rise and reaches a peak within 3 hours. This response is due to ACTH stimulation by the brain neurohormone, corticotropin-releasing hormone.

Certain T-lymphocytes move from the blood to the spleen of birds three to six hours after antigen is given, and are genetically modified through the major histocompatibility complex.

Stress And Immunity

Stressors such as heat, cold, crowding, toxins, or behavioral activities depress circulating antibodies and cell-mediated immunities.

A. Thermal Stress — Exposure to temperature above 95 degrees Fahrenheit or injection with ACTH has been shown to depress circulating antibody against a variety of antigens. However, the response is modified by prestress administration of suppressors of corticosteroid synthesis, which demonstrates that immunosuppression is controlled by corticosteroids. Suppression of cell-mediated types of immunity has been demonstrated in fowl exposed to heat or cold. However, effects of acute thermal stress are not always consistent. Such variations have been ascribed to various factors.

1. Genetic differences in the ability of some birds tc produce antibody; or genetic differences in ability to respond to stress hormones. Lines selected for high antibody response appear to be more intensely affected by high temperature.

2. Nutrition interacts with environmental temperature to increase or decrease immune status. Restricting feed intake to growing birds if temperature falls below 45 degrees F., or exposing birds to sudden temperature change, results in depressed antibody levels. Deficiencies of a number of vitamins, amino acids, or minerals have been found to be detrimental to immune function.

3. Antigen concentration may also influence whether stress alters immunity. Stress depresses immune response when low doses of vaccines are given, but fails to have an effect when high doses are given. For this reason, producers should be careful to give recommended doses and concentrations of vaccines and not try to dilute the dose or allow the vaccines to degrade due to poor storage conditions. Also, the effects of vitamin deficiency on immunity are greater at low antigen doses than at higher doses.

4. The immune system interacts with hormonal and nervous systems. In birds, a basic response to cold is increased metabolism. Primary regulators of metabolism are the thyroid hormones, which also increase antibody production. However, blood levels of thyroid hormones decline immediately following antigen injection. Therefore, while antibody levels may increase if birds are exposed to moderately low temperatures, when temperatures become low enough to exceed the ability of the bird to produce sufficient heat, stress assumes greater importance. Such a condition occurs if energy reserves are insufficient, if the normal insulative abilities of the bird are circumvented, or if the temperature control of the bird is immature.

B. Social Environments — Stressful social environments, such as crowding, hysteria, or aggressive behavior, reduce antibodies against a variety of bacterial antigens including Salmonella and E. coli, and against such viral antigens as Newcastle and Marek's disease.

Birds selected for high adrenal response to social stress bind higher levels of corticosteroid in their lymphatic tissues and therefore are more susceptible to stress-induced immune depression. Antibody to Salmonella pullorum degrades more rapidly in less aggressive families in socially unstable flocks.

Stress And Disease Resistance

Effects of stress on disease resistance seem contradictory. Resistance to mycoplasma infection, Newcastle disease, hemorrhagic enteritis, or Marek's disease is depressed in birds exposed to social conflict, but social conflict actually increases resistance to E. coli or S. Aureus in fowl.

Similarly, resistance to parasitic infection is increased by corticosteroid feeding or social stress. On one hand, cold exposure increases susceptibility of chickens to Salmonella infections, while similar conditions increase resistance to Pasteurella multocida and Newcastle disease.

The reasons for these contradictions are complex. The effects of corticosteroids on a particular pathology and the associated immune responses are important. In addition to depressing antibody and cell-mediated immunities, corticosteroids also reduce inflammation. Therefore, in diseases where the pathology involves local or general inflammation, stress often appears beneficial, even when immunity is lower.

However, where defense depends on inflammation to localize infection, stress-caused increases in corticosteroids leads to invasion of the tissue, especially when immunity is also compromised. Moreover, stress-induced reductions in blood lymphocytes and increases in heterophils (see the first paragraph) will increase resistance to bacteria but decrease resistance to viruses.

Therefore, although immune responses are fundamental to disease resistance and do reflect the bird's response to its environment, changes in disease resistance are not always indicative of stress.

Government Must Support U.S. Agriculture During Transition Period

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The U.S. Government must maintain appropriate policies and programs, including the domestic and export funding that will allow agriculture to compete with the major exporting countries that will seek to maximize their market positions during the GATT transition period, Wayne Boutwell, president of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, told the House Ways and Means Trade Subcommittee recently.

The agriculture leader told lawmakers that "agriculture, perhaps more than any other sector of the U.S. economy, understands that its growth potential lies in the global marketplace. As that marketplace becomes less restrictive, the comparative advantage of the U.S. food and agriculture system will reach its full potential," Boutwell said. "However, it is crucial that U.S. trade policies stay in step with the evolving marketplace."

Boutwell identified several issues of concern to members of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, including the disciplining process for export subsidies, the transition for commodities that have tariffied Section 22 protections, special treatment under the tariffication process, scientific standards for sanitary and phytosanitary regulation, and the appropriate role of government in agriculture and food policy.

"The recurring theme through most of these concerns is the willingness of the U.S. government to support the interests of U.S. agriculture," Boutwell said. "U.S. agriculture must have government support within the prescribed limits if it is to compete effectively during and after the transition period. With these issues addressed, NCFC is prepared to support the implementing legislation."

In Another Set-Back, Hog Venture Loses Building Permit

BELLAIRE (Lancaster/ Dauphin Cos.) — Plans for a major hog operation to be built on a 122-acre farm located next to the Village of Bellaire may have to be reconsidered now that its building permit has been revoked and neighbors are turning up the heat. The site of the proposed 5,400-hog (1,800 sows, 100 boars, 3,500 piglets) feeder operation lies along the banks of the Conewago Creek at Mapledale and Bellaire Roads, near the point where Dauphin, Lancaster and Lebanon Counties meet.

At its Feb. 9th monthly meeting, the Conewago Township (Dauphin Co.) Board of Supervisors voted unanimously to revoke the building permit for construction of two new hog buildings and a 3.5 million gallon manure storage system. The permit had been granted last fall to MACH 3 Partnership, owner of the property.

MACH 3 is comprised of four Lebanon County investors, including Leon G. Hoover, President of Farmer Boy Ag, Inc. of Myerstown. White Oak Mills, Inc. of Elizabethtown has agreed to obtain the animals, provide the feed and run the operation except for the manure management and application. MACH 3 plans to spray-irrigate much of the manure on 82 acres at the site and haul away the rest.

The Conewago Twp. Supervisors, one of whom is a full-time farmer, took the unusual step of revoking the building permit because MACH 3 had failed to provide evidence that it met at least three conditions attached to its Land Development Plan approved last August that are required prior to commencement of the operation. In passing the resolution to revoke the permit, the Board also directed the Township Solicitor to immediately notify MACH 3 and ask them for an explanation. The Board declared the hog project to be "a high priority item" and said an officer would be assigned to have it regularly monitored.

Conditions attached to MACH 3's Land Development Plan included a requirement that at least 300 acres be "available on a continuing basis" for manure application, compliance with Dauphin Co. Soil Conservation District recommendations and those of the Conservation District of any county in which the manure is applied, weekly monitoring and recording of discharge from the manure storage outflow pipe, testing of the Conewago Creek every three months, soil testing every three-years, annual notification of where manure is to be applied, and submission of the manure storage facility design to the Federal SCS Office.

The Bellaire site has been criticized by residents in the immediate vicinity, all of whom are on well water, as well as those in Elizabethtown Borough, situated three miles south. Conewago Creek, a high quality stream which flows into the Susquehanna River, supplies Elizabethtown residents up to half of their public water.

About 100 homes are located within three quarters of a mile of MACH 3's Bellaire farm. The local residents are concerned not only about groundwater contamination but also that the quantity of water needed for the hog operation could cause their well levels to drop significantly.

It is common knowledge that MACH 3's site, which contains a 100-year floodplain, frequently floods during heavy rains and spring thaws. The land percolates poorly and it contains eight underground tile drain lines which flow directly into the adjoining Creek and related tributaries that run through the land.

A group of about 35 local residents have formed a group, Concerned Citizens of Bellaire Area, which has been meeting regularly since last summer. In addition to the water problems, they are also worried that the operation will result in putrid odors. Many of these residents are farmers, retired farmers or were raised on farms. However, they see this as a "hog factory" which will spew out pungent odors that would never be permitted from a manufacturing plant. Paul J. Liskey, Jr., Chairman of the group, says that the operation is "fraught with environmental risks which make it wholly inappropriate for this location." The Concerned Citizens are also troubled by the possibility that fly populations could become intolerable. They also note that high decibel readings from the hog barn fans could be highly irritating to anyone sensitive to such noise within a 1½ mile radius.

Mr. Liskey claims that he and his neighbors are not "just raising the 'NIMBY' flag (Not In My Back Yard)." He says that "it is plainly irresponsible to place an operation like this in low-lying, flood-prone land along the banks of a high quality stream located just a few miles from a significant public water source. An operation like this belongs on high ground, away from streams and rivers and away from population centers."

Members of Concerned Citizens of Bellaire have vowed to fully exercise their legal rights. They have been soliciting support from the entire neighborhood, encouraging everyone to have their wells tested and to consider having their properties appraised prior to the commencement of the hog operation. Nothing that pollution laws, particularly those associated with waterways, ofttimes cast a wide net, the group suggests that area farmers who participate in the project, either in accepting the manure or co-owning the pigs, might be liable for damages. The group recently retained as its environmental counsel Eugene E. Dice, former chief litigator of the DER.

Leaders of the Concerned Citizens of Bellaire Area met in January with Lebanon Attorney George Christianson, one of the MACH 3 Partners, to convey their concerns with the project and urging MACH to implement all possible means to minimize the potential odor, water and noise problems associated with the proposed venture. Although MACH 3 is considering a two-stage lagoon system in place of the single lagoon, with only second-stage liquids being spray irrigated on site, the citizens group was told that the Partnership is unwilling to purchase a manure digester which has been proven to both control odors and produce energy. At this meeting the group suggested it would be willing to buy the land for 30% over the price MACH 3 paid for it a year and a half earlier, but this proposal was rejected.

Representatives of the citizens group also met earlier this month with John Wagner, President of White Oak Mills. They expressed disappointment that the Company rejoined the venture after Mr. Wagner stated last summer that White Oak Mills was severing its involvement with this particular operation.

Mr. Liskey is quick to point out that Concerned Citizens of Bellaire Area "supports traditional family farms and responsible agribusiness." He says that the group has received a great deal of support from farmers who consider the MACH operation a threat to the traditional family farm and an abuse of the exemptions from DER permitting granted to the agriculture ventures. Persons wanting more information may call or write Liskey at (717) 367-5088, 665 Koser Rd., Elizabethtown, PA 17022. The next meeting of the group will be March 10th.

DPI Fund Drive Under Way

GEORGETOWN, Del. — The 1994 Fund Drive for Delmarva Poultry Industry, Inc. (DPI) is under way and hundreds of volunteers are working to reach the $480,000 goal.

At the recent Fund Drive Kickoff Dinner in Seaford, Del., DPI First Vice President and Fund Drive Chairman Douglas K. Marvil announced that cash and pledges received to date totaled $278,913, about 58 percent of the goal.

With 11 weeks remaining until the end of the campaign, Marvil challenged the nearly 150 solicitors to work diligently to meet the goal.

The men and women serving as fund drive volunteers represent all segments of the poultry industry. They will be contacting past DPI investors and seeking new members.

DPI membership includes poultry growers, businesses on Delmarva which recognize the importance of the local poultry industry to their operations and to the economy of the entire peninsula, allied industry suppliers of products and services, poultry company employees, and the eight local poultry companies.

The featured speaker at the kickoff dinner was L. Peter Patrick, president of Peter Patrick Associates, a training, sales, and market consulting business. Mixing humor with an inspirational message, Patrick stressed the importance of teamwork in an association such as DPI. He emphasized that the $480,000 could be met only when the fund drive volunteers were willing to work together for the good of others.

CONSIDER THE MANY ADVANTAGES OF CONCRETE

This has been quite the winter, hasn't it? I think most of us are really looking forward to spring. In the meantime, we have to get through this ice, snow, and soon MUD! There's a lot of ground not frozen because of the snow cover, and if you must go over that ground to get to your stored feed, that will cause quite a struggle.

And, if the long range forecasters are right, another 6 years of severe winter weather means you will want to be better prepared to store and handle your valuable feeds.

"On most dairy farms, QUALITY FORAGE is the single most important factor affecting profit."

Our business has to do with "Protecting Your Forage Quality." Nobody protects forage quality like we do... Nobody!

The bulls are ultrasonically scanned for backfat thickness and loin-eye area and are given a complete breeding soundness and semen exam. The bulls will have health papers to go anywhere. After the evaluation, the top two-thirds of the bulls will be offered. In the past, these bulls have been real herd-improving bargains.

Unverferth Snap-Ons: more of what you're looking for Operating Guidelines

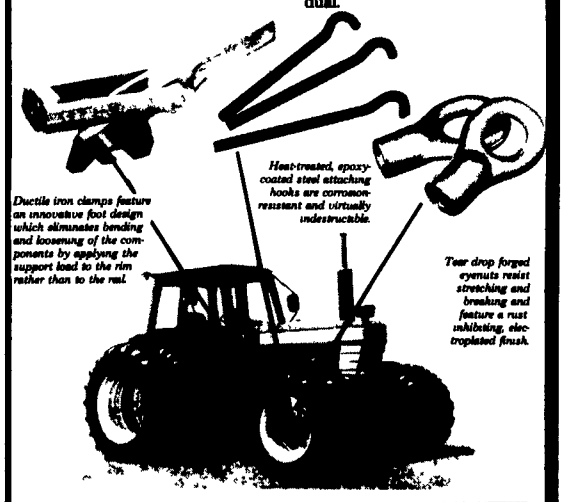
As in all dual wheel applications, Snap-On duals should be maintained at lower air pressure than the original tractor tires.

To remove Snap-On duals, simply position one clamp at top center and remove all other clamps. Then, using the furnished handle for additional leverage, disengage the remaining clamp to loosen the dual.



Ductile iron clamps feature an innovative foot design which eliminates bending and loosening of the components by applying the support load to the rim rather than to the rod.
Heat-treated, epoxy-coated steel attaching hooks are corrosion-resistant and virtually indestructable.
Tear drop forged eyenuts resist stretching and breaking and feature a rust inhibiting, electroplated finish.

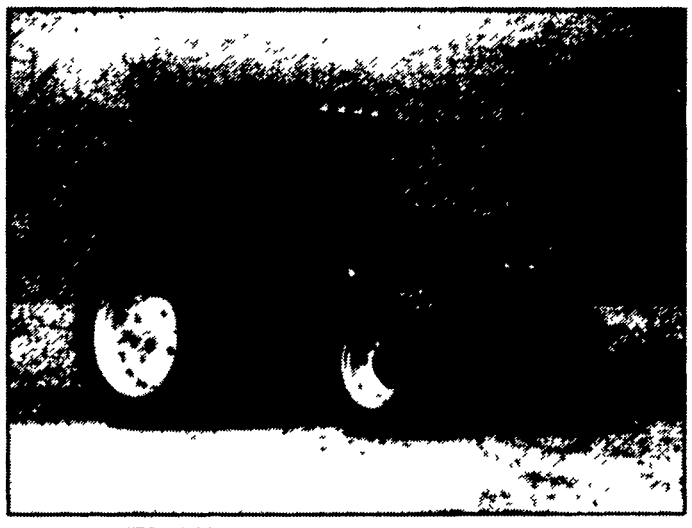
For The Way You Farm Today

Fingertip Powershift Control, Improved Field Visibility and The Most Comfortable Cab Ever



AGCO ALLIS
For the way you farm today

Model 9650
147 PTO HP (109.7 kW)

With their new 18x9 speed full powershift transmissions that electronically control the engagement of massive gears with just the tap of a hand... their cab-forward design that permits a clear, unobstructed view of the field in all directions... and their roomy, comfortable cabs, that feature a unique swivel, air-ride seat and an exclusive seat-mounted control console, the new 9600 Series tractors are clearly ahead of the time.

Every component — from the sleek, sloping hood, to the rugged, cast-iron mainframe to the world-proven air-cooled diesel engines, that require less maintenance — has been designed to match the way you farm today. The result is greater comfort, better performance and improved productivity.

Compare the features and specifications for yourself. Better yet, stop by your AGCO Allis dealer soon and try out one of the 9600 models for yourself. You have to drive it to believe it.

AGRICULTURAL RADIALS

KLEBER TIRE CORPORATION: A MICHELIN TIRE CORPORATION DIVISION!!

For years Kleber has been the European leader in agricultural radials, both in original equipment and replacement sales Now, that same technology is avaialble in the East.

INTRODUCING A NEW FAMILY OF RADIAL FARM TIRES

A front/rear radial tire designed for heavy-high horse power tractors that can improve traction over 15%, whilo reducing soil compaction! Operating air pressure as low as 8 P.S.I. will dramatically boost your yields

EXCLUSIVE BENEFITS BY DESIGN

What do we say when our customers ask us-for the best farm tire we have? (After all, by now he has tried Goodyear, Firestone, Armstrong...). We have a new answer to that old question Kleber (Pronounced Claybear) Here's why Kleber, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Michelin Tire Corporation has been making radial farm tires since 1952 In Europe (which is 85% radial), Kleber is number one and michelin is number two in both original equipment and replacement farm tires The immediate benefits farmers will have are.

1 Tremendous traction-after all, Kleber is a minimum of 28% deeper in non-skid. For example, a Kleber 18 4R38 is 64/32nds vs. 51/32nds on any commodity radial made in the U S

2 The exclusively patented innerlug system accelerates cleanout, reduced downtime and supplements traction.

3 The unique carcass and belt configuration allows directional stability on the highway even with center hitch equipment. After all, Kleber is designed for road use. It is, in fact, speed rated at 25 mph.

4 And last, in addition to the normal benefits of radials, Kleber's wear is so extended that we have product on main tractor application with ten years of service in 8,000 hours.

WHY KLEBER RADIAL FARM TIRES?

- Lowest Cost per hour
- Highest traction - wet or dry
- Quietest highway transport
- Smoothest ride - no bounce
- Greatest fuel economy
- Most stable center hitch haul
- Lowest uniform soil compaction
- Fastest wet soil clean out

WHAT ARE THE UNIQUE FEATURES THAT MAKE KLEBER HEAD AND SHOULDER ABOVE THE COMPETITION?

- Dual angle bead configuration to insure no slip rim grip
- Bead/sidewall/belt package that provides on/off highway stability
- Non-stretch belts that reinforce the premium bar depth while protecting the radial carcass from field hazards
- Advanced R-1W bar depth to provide extra traction and low cost/hour usage
- Non-stretch belt/carcass design to minimize soil compaction, eliminate pressure spikes and provide uniform wear pattern
- Total design/build techniques to insure stable no bounce ride with center hitch equipment at 45 KPH
- Noise/vibration engineering to optimize bar contour/spacing
- Close technical ties to all tractor manufacturers in the Western World insuring compatibility
- Extensive front wheel assist OE/replacement knowledge world-wide
- In-house research - development staff

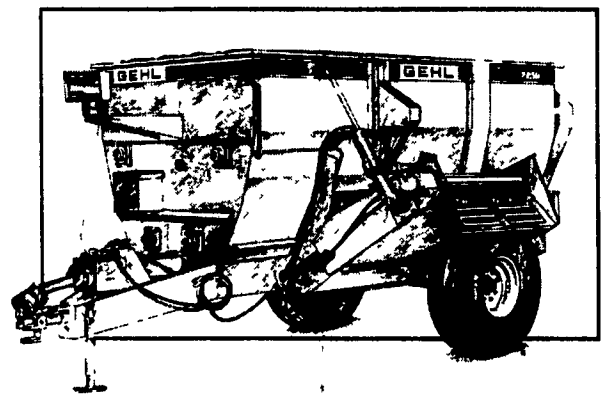
GEHL

GEHL TMR MIXER FEEDERS ARE #1



Nothing makes a Total Mixed Ration (TMR) feeding system work better than a Gehl mixer feeder. Here's why:

- Better Mixing Action – Unique four-auger design creates a double figure-8 mixing pattern for fast and complete mixing of all feed ingredients.
- Energy Efficient – Planetary drive system requires less horsepower
- Built To Last – Patented star couplers absorb shock loads by allowing the bottom augers to flex, providing long service life.
- Six Sizes – 150 to 500 cubic feet capacities.
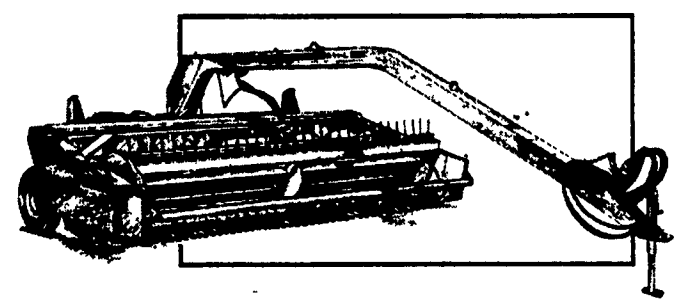
- Three Styles – Trailer type, stationary and truck-mounted units to fit your operation.

CUT 'N TURN



Gehl's swing-frame mower conditioners feature:

- Full-width conditioning rolls with intermittent ribs.
- Total hydraulic drive for smooth operation.
- Center-pivot design for excellent maneuverability.
- Three-point flotation support protects the cutterbar.
- Easily adjustable for full-width swaths or high-standing windrows.

To Get Healthier Cows, There's A Lot To Prepare.™

To help dry cows prepare for freshening and the onset of lactation, you need new Purina® Prepare™ Dry Cow Supplement.

Most problems in early lactation begin in the dry period, but properly fed, managed, and conditioned dry cows have less calving trouble, healthier calves, and fewer breeding failures. They can also produce 1000 to 2000 lb more milk. Prepare effectively helps dry cows reach their ideal calving weight and body condition.

There is a lot to Prepare. Ask us about it.
